Rommel in Full Retreat, Loses 260 Tanks Democrats Barely Control House, Face Coalition

Republicans Fatten Minority In Lower Chamber to 208 Seats, Pick Up 9 in Senate to Increase Holdings to 38 in Wide Victories

(Other election news on Pages 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9.)

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

A bare majority of the House and a bleak 11-man margin in the Senate last night was all that remained of once-overwhelming Democratic legislative controls after a near-sweep by Republicans of National and State offices.

Organization control of the House, with the Speakership, was retained by a razor's edge, as the off-year election tide swept House Republicans to a 10-year high point of at least 208 seats, only ten shy of a majority.

With five contests undetermined, House G. O. P. gains stood at 43. Nine additional seats in the Senate bulged the once-lean Republican Senate minority to 38 seats. The Senate, like the House, was now subject to only nominal Democratic control.

Four and probably five governorships in key States, formerly held by Democrats, had switched definitely to Republicans. The G. O. P. had elected 17 Governors against 14 for Democrats, 5 of these from the South.

House and Senate gains, while not yet attaining a majority of either chamber, reached so close in the case of the House that a coalition of Republicans with conservative Southern Democrats may be sufficient to write its own legislative agenda on domestic issues.

Democratic statehouse strongholds bowing to the Republican off-year assault apparently gave the G. O. P. control of enough State organizations and patronage to make a serious bid for the Presidency in 1944.

Deemed More Than Normal 'Off-Year' Swing

In its snowball proportions, it was far more than a normal "off-year" swing, and observers of both parties swiftly read into it a strong current of concern and dissatisfaction at handling of necessary local and national war measures.

Republicans and Democrats agreed that only Axis propaganda could interpret the sweeping tide against the "ins" as the slightest setback to vigorous prosecution of the war effort.

Comment of Chairman J. William Ditter of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, was typical of the G. O. P. interpretation. Ditter said the swing reflected "the demand of the American people for substitution of competency and common sense for mismanagement and foolishness in the prosecution of the war effort."

He said an "all out war effort by the people should be matched by an all-out war effort in Washington."

A wide range of Democrats took to the upset as a central protest pattern, but a variety of considerations, mostly local, ranging from a rural slip-back at Administration farm policies, to criticism of some rationing steps and the manner in which war news has been handled.

That the Administration will have to tighten its conduct of the war, and probably take Republican leaders into its counsel, was apparent as late returns bore out the strong early Republican trend.

Even in the Senate, where Democratic majority control appeared safe for the next two elections, the influx of Republican Senators threatened to lend itself to bipartisan combinations embarrassing to the Administration on domestic issues, unless party lines hold more firmly than in the past.

Veteran Norris Among Defeated Senators

The total of nine new Senate chairs apparently collected by Republicans ranged from the Independent Nebraska seat of the veteran George Norris to formerly Democratic seats taken over in Iowa, South Dakota, Delaware, Michigan, Oklahoma, West Virginia, Wyoming and New Jersey.

Former Democratic Governorships that fell by the wayside to up-swinging Republicans ranged from politically potent New York to Connecticut, Michigan, California and possibly Idaho.

While pre-Pearl Harbor isolationists opposed by the Administration were mostly returned in House and Senate contests, many of the strongest supporters of the President's war course before December 7 also rode with them to victory.

Cases in point included Minnesota, which reelected Harold Stassen, Governor, and Joseph Ball, Senator, both Republicans but four-square with the President and Wendell Willkie on this Nation's foreign course before America ever entered the war.

No less significant was the apparent victory of Senator James E. Murray, 100 per cent Democratic supporter of the President, over the brother of Representative Jeannette Rankin in Montana, stronghold of Senator Wheeler's pre-Pearl Harbor isolationism.

While a wide swath was cut in House Democratic ranks, the Administration's House leaders emerged intact and no major House committee chairmen were unseated. By a narrow squeak, Chairman Andrew J. May (Kentucky), of the House Military Affairs Committee, handling the vital teen-age bill, retained his seat.

Speaker Rayburn, Majority Leader McCormack and Majority Whip Ramspeck were returned by good majorities, as was Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., who would have been the new Speaker had the G. O. P. surge swept a little higher.

In the Senate, defeat of Senator Prentiss Brown in Michigan was a serious leadership loss to the Administration. Perhaps only through Brown's guidance was the price bill salvaged from a farm bloc raid. Majority Leader Barkley was not up for reelection. Minority Leader McNary was returned in a walk.

Some late turns in the voting were consoling to Democrats, notably salvaging of May's seat in Kentucky; reelection of Senator Edwin C. Johnson of Colorado, who had trailed Gov. Ralph L. Carr (Republican), in the first returns, and the winning finish of Senator Murray in Montana.

Other late twists were as definitely disconcerting, as in Delaware, where C. Douglas Buck outdistanced E. Ennals Berl, Democratic entry for the Senate; in Wyoming, where Democratic Senator Harry Schwartz

GOP Upsurge May Modify Farm Policies

Heavy Midwest Vote Against Democrats Reported to Reflect Farm Dissatisfaction

By Ovid A. Martin
Associated Press Staff Writer

Republican triumphs in the Midwestern farm belt, attributed in part to farmer dissatisfaction with Administration measures affecting agriculture, raised last night the possibility of change in the war food production and price control policies.

Significant gains in Senate and House seats were made by Republicans in the great livestock, dairy, poultry and grain producing regions of the upper Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri Rivers and the Great Plains—areas which in 1932 turned to the New Deal in displeasure at Republican farm policies.

Several Issues

Late election returns indicated that the congressional farm bloc—a group which President Roosevelt criticized severely in recent legislative battles over farm price controls—won new strength while the ranks of those who stood behind the Administration were weakened.

The farm bloc has stood or continues to stand at odds with the Administration on many as yet unsettled issues affecting agricultural production and price control. These issues involve farm labor shortages, restrictions on the manufacture of farm machinery, gasoline and tire rationing and price ceilings on food products needed in expanding quantities for the war effort.

Plans of the Agriculture Department and the Office of Price Administration to use subsidies on an extensive scale to help meet farm labor shortages and to prevent upward revisions in farm price ceilings undoubtedly face a severe test. Many successful Republican candidates made an issue of such subsidies.

Further, the farm bloc finds itself in a much better position to demand Administration rejection of its interpretation that the recently enacted price control law allows farm conservation and parity pay.

Brown's Interpretation

The Midwestern farm vote may lead the Administration to consider changing position on many of these issues. D. A. R. Again Bars Marian Anderson From Its Hall Marian Anderson, Negro singer, again has been denied the opportunity to sing in the D. A. R.'s Constitution Hall.

This was the result of the D. A. R.'s refusal to accept the conditions set by Miss Anderson for her acceptance of the D. A. R. invitation to appear in the Hall.

In 1939 the Daughters refused to permit the singer to use the hall because of a previously made arrangement, and in consequence she was invited to sing from the Steps of the Lincoln Memorial and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt resigned from the D. A. R.

Upon receiving the recent invitation to sing at the hall, Miss Anderson set as conditions that there be no segregation of the races and that she be permitted to appear in the hall in future concerts. The D. A. R. objected to the latter.

Digest of Election Upsets And Contributing Factors

Some of the high points of Tuesday's election and apparent contributing factors:

Michigan—Senator Prentiss Brown, a right hand of the President in the Senate, lost to Homer Ferguson, racket-busting judge, in Michigan. Ferguson won local popularity by cleaning up Detroit graft. Brown thought his defeat partly due to rationing and other war restrictions.

Nebraska—Senator George W. Norris, 81-year-old Independent Liberal, defeated in Nebraska by Kenneth Wherry, Republican State leader. Norris, who always has counted on Democratic strength, got caught in a three-way contest with the Democrat refusing to withdraw.

New Jersey—Senator William H. Smathers, Senate ally of Mayor Hague, took an unexpected licking from a Republican former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Albert W. Hawkes. A State Democratic schism, with Gov. Charles Edison in revolt against the Hague forces, contributed to Smathers' defeat.

West Virginia—Former Senator Matthew M. Neely failed in a return try for the Senate from West Virginia. Chapman Revercomb, a Republican who never held public office, beat Neely in an unexpected State protest against the Charleston Democrat's machine grip on the State.

New York—Former New York Prosecuting Attorney Thomas E. Dewey took the Empire State Governor's chair in a walk from Attorney General John J. Bennett, Farley entry. A tardily-healed break with the Administration on Bennett's nomination and a third party entry by American Labor helped Dewey.

Oklahoma—Senator Josh Lee, ardent New Dealer, lost a Senate Democratic citadel in Oklahoma to E. H. Moore, former Willkie Democrat. Moore charged Administration bungling in domestic and war policies, but a New Dealer rode into the governorship. Lee snuffed a cue when he tried to tag a Prohibition rider on the teen-age bill.

California—Culbert L. Olson, first Democratic Governor of California, in 43 years, surrendered his Statehouse to Attorney General Earl Warren. Republican Olson was at odds with his own party and Warren made a nonpartisan campaign. One California Democrat called Warren's sweep a West Coast protest against the Government's handling of war news.

Iowa and Wyoming Republicans joined two Senate seats from the Democrats with defeat of Senator Clyde Herring, too middle-of-the-road, and Senator Harry H. Schwartz, too liberal for conservative Republican trends in each State. Rural opposition scored also in South Dakota, where Senator Bulow's old seat went to Harian Bush, a Republican.

Government Defied on 2 Labor Fronts

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

The Government moved yesterday on two widely separated fronts to "crack down" on defiance of Government wartime emergency order by a large Chicago mail order house and by an association of long-staple cotton growers in Arizona.

Rising quickly to meet a threat by the Montgomery Ward mail order house to violate a proposed War Labor Board ruling which was made before its issuance, Public Member Wayne L. Morse warned the company at an open hearing that the Government would use all the forces at its command to deal with the defiance if it developed, possibly by putting the firm out of business for the duration.

McNutt and Wickard Act
In the case of the cotton growers, Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the War Manpower Commission, and Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard took steps to get harvested the badly needed crop of Arizona long-staple cotton by telegraphing a warning to the growers that they would be held "responsible" for the safety of the present crop.

The crop has gone virtually un-picked for several weeks because of the refusal of the growers to employ labor brought in by the Farm Security Administration at a minimum wage of 30 cents an hour. It is understood that the growers are willing to pay wages equivalent to 30 cents an hour, but that they are unwilling to accept the principle of a minimum wage in agriculture. The cotton is needed for Army parachutes and balloons. Are in Earnest

It is understood that high Government officials are in earnest about ending the two defiance, both because they are anxious to end situations which have been damaging to wartime efficiency and morale and because they believe that the two defiance represent positive threats to the continued operation of the President's war emergency powers.

In the War Labor Board case, Montgomery Ward's challenge is believed to peril the ability of WLB to exercise jurisdiction over all employers—both war and civilian—for purposes of wage stabilization. The refusal of the cotton growers to accept Government help in hiring labor even though they are critically short of labor imperils the present War Manpower Commission program to use existing authority to regulate employment from the desert battlefield.

Russians Hold In Stalingrad And Caucasus

By Henry C. Cassidy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Thursday), Nov. 5.—The Red army held its ground in Stalingrad and the central Caucasus Wednesday and kept the initiative on the Black Sea front and north-west of Stalingrad, the Soviet mid-night communique said today.

The Germans continued to hurl masses of tanks into the battle on the Nalchik Plains, at the foot of the 18,000-foot Caucasus Mountains, and in the rubble-strewn streets of Stalingrad, but the Russians repulsed all attacks, inflicting heavy losses.

On the other two major fronts—northwest of Stalingrad and in the Black Sea area—the Red army captured a number of German positions in both areas.

The Germans were reported to have been forced to withdraw some of their elite troops from Stalingrad to meet the threat to their left flank northwest of the city after Red army riflemen, ferried by night across the Volga, entered the battle.

The communique said, however, that the Germans continued to attack all Soviet positions inside the Volga city with both tanks and infantry, indicating there had been no decrease in the intensity of the fighting. It said 1,000 Germans were killed and eight tanks disabled during the day, without any gains in ground.

Strengthened by the reinforcements, Russian troops northwest

Island Advance

Goes Into Third Day; Fleeing Japs Leave Equipment Behind

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

American Marines and Army troops on Guadalcanal, closely supported by bombers and fighter planes, have continued their advance west of the United States air base into the third successive day, the Navy announced last night.

The retreating Japs, it was disclosed, have lost equipment to the attacking Americans. About 20 enemy machineguns and two small artillery pieces were captured November 2, the communique stated.

Meanwhile, the eastern flank of the hemmed-in American forces, where Japanese reinforcements landed Monday night, continued quiet.

The late Navy communique said there has been no report of troop activity in this area to date.

Air Forces in Support
Throughout Monday (Solomons time), the Navy statement revealed, Maj. Gen. Alexander A. Vandegrift's forces continued to attack the Japs west of Guadalcanal airfield.

Army and Navy planes "gave close support" to the attacking American ground forces, it was said, bombing and strafing the enemy troops and behind-the-lines installations.

"Some small gains" were made November 2, it was said.

The next morning, Vandegrift's forces resumed their assaults, which started November 1, after they had beaten off a strong Jap offensive some days earlier.

"The advance to the west continued" during Tuesday morning, the Navy stated.

Field Named For Hero
It was evident from the report either that the Japanese retreat was not entirely orderly, or that a number of small enemy units were wiped out in the American advance. Otherwise the Japanese machine guns and field cannon would not have fallen into American hands.

The Japs on the island apparently lack air support—there have been no recent reports of enemy air attacks on our positions—and

By Edward Kennedy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cairo, Nov. 4.—Marshall Erwin Rommel's Axis desert forces were officially declared in full and disordered retreat tonight across the sands of western Egypt, pursued relentlessly by British Imperial ground forces and under constant attack from above by American and Allied airmen.

A special Allied communique said General von Stumme, Nazi second in command, had been killed in the 12-day fight which preceded the flight of the "disordered columns," and 9000 Axis prisoners had been taken, including Gen. Ritter von Thoma, commander of the Afrika Korps, and other topflight German and Italian officers.

The joint communique announced these tremendous Axis losses in less than two weeks of battle:

"Exceptionally high" casualties in dead and wounded. Six hundred planes. Two hundred and sixty tanks destroyed or captured. Two hundred and seventy guns. Fifty thousand tons of shipping laden with supplies.

Allied air losses were described as "light" in the 12-day bloody break-through by which the British Imperials hope to smash with finality the Axis position in Africa.

General von Thoma was said to have been captured only a short time after assuming his command upon the death of General von Stumme.

(The victorious British communique was issued about the time the Berlin radio was acknowledging "British local successes," but insisting that "Marshall Rommel has the situation completely in hand and is position to take the initiative at any moment he considers necessary. The German announcer quoted "military quarters" as saying the British had lost between 450 and 500 tanks in the action thus far.)

(A Reuters dispatch to London, dated Thursday, said Italians in one sector of the Egyptian front had asked for a truce to bury their dead. The dispatch said Italian casualties were extremely heavy in the area involved.)

Infantry Did Heavy Preliminary
The British drive westward climaxed days of a and aerial preparation which softened the Axis line, touched off an elaborate 4-mile-deep mine field, and knocked out other fixed Nazi positions.

Imperial infantry did a heavy preliminary job before Gen. B. L. Montgomery hurled his huge tank forces through a gap torn in the Axis flank west of El Alamein. The same procedure was followed 40 miles to the south at the edge of the Qattara salt sinks in an effort to roll up the Nazi positions from both flanks.

Hundreds of Allied planes pounded the Axis supply lines as far back as the Libyan port of Tobruk, which was one of the main intake points for much-needed Axis supplies hazardedly ferried across the Mediterranean from Italy and Greece.

So superior was the advantage enjoyed by the Allies this time in the air, the communique said that 300 Axis planes were shot down in combat, and "a like number" destroyed or put out of action on the ground. United States airmen played a major part in this sky artillery war, and their big bombers accounted for some of the 50,000 tons of shipping sunk along the Mediterranean coast behind the Axis forward lines.

Tonight these American and R. A. F. fliers still were hacking at the tattered Axis infantry and the remnants of their armored forces streaking westward along the coast toward El Daba, 35 miles behind the punctured Alamein Line. One pilot said the enemy had little or no chance to escape.

Under the protection of this Allied sky artillery, the British Eighth Army was continuing its advance. Although the extent of Imperial ground gains was not stated in the communique, front dispatches said the Imperials were beyond Sidi Abd El Rahman, a coastal railway point 18 miles west of Alamein.

Von Stumme a Key Man
Thus the Nazi threat to the big British naval base at Alexandria had been removed by a distance of about 100 miles. British tanks henceforth will enjoy greater maneuverability in the desert now that the Alamein Line has been shattered, but full advantage in this respect will not come until the Germans have been pushed as far west as Matruh, which is 75 miles beyond El Daba. The western border of Qattara Depression in the desert to the south is on a line drawn south from Matruh.

The area through which the Imperial army now is pouring was reported strewn with the bodies of Axis dead and the burned-out hulks of hundreds of enemy tanks knocked out in the big armored battle of Sunday night and Monday.

But far to the rear there also were similar scenes where the Allied airmen had done their punishing.

"I never saw such destruction," said Brig. Gen. A. C. Strickland, chief of the bomber command of the U. S. A. F. Middle East unit, in telling of yesterday's attacks on fleeing Axis columns to the rear. General Strickland personally led the attacking United States bomber forces.

"We swept over the road and saw it packed with transport. But every vehicle was stopped and everywhere there were tiny trails of dust where the crews were running into the desert. Every bomber in our

3 Craft Actually Delivered, British Sources Announce

By the Associated Press
London, Nov. 4.—The Ministry of Economic Warfare asserted today that the Vichy government was handing over 35 former Allied merchantmen in French Mediterranean ports to the Axis.

Total 120,000 Tons
The announcement said the ships being handed over totaled 120,000 tons. Thirteen of the vessels are going to Germany and 22 to Italy.

A B. C. broadcast October 28 said German authorities in Paris had told Pierre Laval, French chief of government, that he must surrender all merchant ships, French or foreign, which were in France's ports.

Norwegian, Danish, Greek
Foreign ships in French harbors were reported to include Norwegian, Danish and Greek vessels.

The ministry said that so far as was known only three ships actually had reached the Axis. These were taken to Genoa.

Reuters said today that a Vichy broadcast had reported that French naval "specialists" had left for Germany.

The broadcast gave no details as to the character or number of the specialists.

of Stalingrad captured five dug-outs and fortified positions, while Soviet artillery demolished nine blockhouses. About 130 Germans were killed in this area, the communiqué said.

Foe Repulsed Near Nalchik
In the central Caucasus area, where the Germans are trying desperately to reach the historic Georgian military highway, main artery across the lofty mountain barrier, the Russians claimed to have repulsed all attacks in the big battle southeast of Nalchik.

At one point Soviet troops killed 350 Germans and set seven tanks on fire, the communiqué said, while at another place 16 German tanks were set on fire and an additional 17 disabled.
On the Black Sea front, one Russian unit was reported to have captured "several enemy strong defense points" northeast of Tuzpse and killed about 400 Germans. To the east of Novorossiisk, German-occupied Black Sea port, a group of Russian scouts penetrated behind enemy lines and raided the headquarters of a German unit, killing 27 men, including a battalion commander and a company commander.

formation turned and sailed down the road, spilling their bombs on vehicles and men.

The joint communiqué which disclosed the first detailed results of this third British offensive said the slain Gen. von Stumme had been Field Marshal Rommel's stand-in whenever the latter made his periodic trips to Germany.

His death was an obvious hard blow to Axis leadership along with the capture of Gen. Ritter von Thoma and other senior Axis officers.

The communiqué follows in full:
"Axis forces in the western desert, after 12 days and nights of ceaseless attacks by our land and air forces, now are in full retreat.

Their disordered columns are being relentlessly attacked by our land forces and by Allied air forces day and night.

"General von Stumme, senior general who was said to have been in command during Rommel's absence in Germany, is known to have been killed.

"So far we captured over 9000 prisoners, including Gen. Ritter von Thoma, commander of the German Afrika Korps, and a number of other senior German and Italian officers.

"It is known the enemy's losses in killed and wounded have been exceptionally high. Up to date we have destroyed more than 260 German and Italian tanks and captured or destroyed at least 270 guns. The full toll of booty cannot be assessed at this stage of operation.

"In the course of these operations our air forces, whose losses have been light, have destroyed or damaged in air combat over 300 aircraft and destroyed or put out of action a like number on the ground.

"At sea our naval and air forces have sunk 50,000 tons and damaged as much again of shipping carrying Axis supplies to North Africa.

"The Eighth Army continues to advance."

Near the coast, Australian troops cracked the Axis lines and minefields, turned north and anchored themselves on the Mediterranean rim. Behind them several thousands of Germans and Italians were pocketed for several days.

By now however the Axis pocket has been "completely overrun," dispatches from the front said tonight.

After the Australians punched this hole, General Montgomery sent a powerful tank and motorized infantry group through it to meet a challenging Twenty-first Nazi Panzer Division. The enemy division was smashed and routed, and the British pushed on past Sidi Abd El Rahman.

Before tonight's communiqué was issued front dispatches had given this picture of the general situation.

On the north, Lieut. Gen. B. L. Montgomery's powerful tanks and motor-mechanized infantry, after cracking and routing the Twenty-first German Panzer Division, had swept on beyond the coastal railway station of Sidi Abd El Rahman, which is 18 miles west of El Alamein.

The advancing British forces thus had pushed the enemy back in the north almost half way to coastal El Daba from the easternmost point of Axis penetration.

On the south, the enemy fled from their positions at Deir El Musassib and El Himeimat.

El Himeimat is an important prominence which previously gave the enemy command of a large area. It is almost at the edge of the Qattara salt sink. Deir El Musassib is about 10 miles to the north.

The Allied air offensive which accompanied the big smash broke all records in intensity yesterday.

Only twice, said the R. A. F., did the enemy attempt retaliation bombings. One formation had to jettison bombs and flee. The other lost eight dive bombers and two fighters and suffered damage to a dozen other aircraft, when engaged by the Allied fighters.

So fierce was the blasting of enemy tanks that some Axis units were reported to have surrendered rather than take more punishment from the air.

The total score by Allied planes in the African and Mediterranean operations Tuesday was 15 enemy planes destroyed for sure. Sixteen Allied aircraft failed to return.

X's for Kisses Out, By Censors' Edict

London, Nov. 4.—This is a note for the girls that American soldiers, now stationed in the British Isles left behind:

If your soldier stops putting "X's" or crosses to indicate kisses in his letters home, don't jump to the conclusion that he has fallen for a girl on this side of the Atlantic. Blame the military censors. For security reasons, "X's" are out.

Damage to the planes was minor.

Collision of Army Plane, Airliner Being Probed
Kansas City, Nov. 4 (AP)—Army officials tonight were investigating the freak midair collision of a huge Army cargo plane and a passengerless Transcontinental & Western Airline plane near Kansas City.

Pilots of both sky giants succeeded in bringing their ships to earth without injury to crew members.

The commercial plane was on a check flight testing blind flying instruments at the time of the accident. It was piloted by Capt. L. K. Welch. Also aboard were First Officers M. M. Lipke and J. U. Goetz.

Capt. L. T. Penn of Phoenix, Ariz., pilot of the Army ship, brought his plane to a landing at the municipal airport. His copilot was Lieut. O. C. Burrell, Reliance, S. Dak.

Enlisted men aboard the Army plane were Sergts. M. D. Bellemann, E. J. Lespley, R. R. Root and Corp. H. Adams, none of whose addresses were available.

Yanks Advance In Solomons Enters 3d Day

are apparently taking heavy punishment from the American dive-bombers from Henderson Field.

Naval officials, incidentally, declared yesterday that this designation of the Guadalcanal Airdrome has no official status. The men on the beleaguered island informally named the vital airfield in honor of Maj. Lofton R. Henderson, Marine flier who dove his blazing plane into the smokescreen of a Jap aircraft carrier during the Battle of Midway.

Hindering official recognition of this spontaneous and happy christening is the fact that the Navy Department has already honored Major Henderson by naming an airfield at Midway after him.

Military and naval authorities here, while gratified about the land advances ashore on Guadalcanal, hardly expect any decisive results from the action.

Reinforcements Necessary
They should enable Vandegrift's forces to defend more effectively the vital air base against another Japanese offensive and undoubtedly will delay the enemy in getting ready for the expected "second round" of the Solomons Battle. But before any major campaign can be started to drive the Japs from the island, heavy reinforcements and supplies must be brought into Guadalcanal.

Inasmuch as the Japanese probably still have a considerable naval superiority in the South Pacific, the initiative remains with them. We are expected to remain on the defensive in the Solomons for some time, despite the advances in the local action on Guadalcanal.

Text of Communiqué
The text of the Navy communiqué, No. 181, follows:

"South Pacific (all dates are east longitude):

"1. On November 2, United States forces on Guadalcanal island continued to attack the enemy to the westward of our positions and made some small gains.

"Army and Navy planes gave close support to our ground forces by bombing and strafing enemy troops and positions. About 20 enemy machine guns and two small artillery pieces were captured. The advance to the west continued during the morning of November 3.

No report of troop activity on the eastern flank of our positions has been received.

"2. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Axis' Stress On Kokoda Is Boomerang
By Charles S. Foltz
Associated Press Staff Writer
Lisbon, Nov. 4.—The fall of the little jungle village of Kokoda, which only a handful of Europeans ever had heard of until this summer, has had a tremendous effect on Europe—thanks to Axis propaganda before the tide turned against the Japanese on New Guinea.

Back in September, when the Germans became touchy about emphasizing "the last moments of Stalingrad" in their news releases and broadcasts, they began to give a big play to the Japanese offensive in New Guinea.

Under a Tokyo dateline they cited Japanese dispatches from Kokoda, describing it as a "Japanese base on the Australian front," told how the Japanese had General MacArthur on the run and explained it was only a matter of days until Port Moresby fell and the Japanese pounced upon northern Australia.

But German propaganda now has come home to roost.

No maps appear in the German press—nor does the name of Kokoda.

But small items were in the neutral press reporting Kokoda's fall and London and New York were heard broadcasting announcements of its capture.

This news made a tremendous impression—perhaps an even greater impression than other more important battles now raging—on Continental peoples.

It was the last straw necessary to swing many doubting Thomases to the conviction that the Japanese were on the defensive.

A change has come almost all at once.

Lyttelton Arrives For War Councils

Hard to Face WPB Halts Production Of Razors

By Kenneth L. Dixon
Associated Press Staff Writer

The War Production Board yesterday cut off safety razor manufacture for civilian use and placed all razors and blades under strict restrictions today—but (Hear! hear!) the Nation's menfolks were assured there's no need to start bristling up.

In the first place, the WPB predicted that there would be "blades for everybody" in civilian life in 1943, since millions of the men are in uniform.

Reason for Satisfaction

And besides, even if worst came to worst, the average American male could whistle through his whiskers with the assurance that the 800-odd tons of high-grade steel to be saved by the shutdown would go into such things as commando knives.

The order specifically stated that safety razors now may be produced only (1) for the fighting men, (2) for export, and (3) for lease-lend purposes. Straight razor production was sharply curtailed for November and December and will be halted entirely January 1—when the manufacturers start turning out those cutting little numbers to tickle the Axis throats.

To prove there should be plenty of blades for some time, WPB pointed out that production next year will approximate 2,750,000,000, which is a 20 per cent reduction from the record 1941 output, but a 12 per cent increase over 1940.

But it still will be wise for the whiskery lads to look around for ways of preserving old blades—and such things as two shaves a day for bluebeards may soon come under the heading of luxury.

British Vessel Sunk Off Coast Of South America

The Navy announced yesterday that a medium-sized British merchant vessel had been torpedoed and sunk by an enemy submarine in the middle of September in the Atlantic off the northern coast of South America. Survivors have been landed at an East Coast port.

Earlier in the day the sinking of a small United States merchant vessel early in October in the Atlantic off the northern coast of South America, had been announced. Survivors were landed at an East Coast port of the United States.

British Mission Aim Seen to Integrate Allied Strategy Pattern

Further integration of the wartime economies of the United States and Great Britain in the pattern of strategy decisions of the combined chiefs of staff—a step that may have an important bearing on the opening of a second front—was foreshadowed yesterday by the surprise arrival in Washington of British Minister of Production Oliver Lyttelton.

Lyttelton and a party of about 15 British production experts which included his second in command, Sir Walter Layton, ace production planner, were flown to the United States in three American-made planes. They were accompanied by W. Averell Harriman, lend-lease expediter and the London representative of the War Production Board Chairman Donald M. Nelson.

Asked about the significance of the official mission, a spokesman observed that "new plans" can not be developed satisfactorily by American and British production officials solely through the medium of the transatlantic cable.

The detailed nature of the "new plans" was not divulged.

Last June 9 President Roosevelt announced formation of the Combined Production and Resources Board, a kind of "International WPB," which would have the job of attempting to mold the national economies of this country and Great Britain into a single, efficient munitions-making machine capable of using to the best possible advantage facilities and resources available to each nation.

Lyttelton was made the British member of the board and Nelson the American member. Since then, experts have been busy laying the groundwork for international military-economic strategy, not only on a two-nation level—but on a global basis. The work has been conducted under the immediate direction of James H. Knowlson, vice chairman of the WPB, and Sir Robert Sinclair, who was sent to the United States as Lyttelton's deputy.

It was expected that the British mission would meet at the White House with President Roosevelt, the combined British-American chiefs of staff and American production officials. A spokesman for Nelson said that he and Lyttelton might confer today. Nelson had been expected to return Lyttelton's visit of last June, but a series of organizational and scarce-material crises kept him in Washington.

As a phase of the general problem of organizing United Nations economy along strategic lines, it was thought likely that the leaders of the two countries might alter existing ratios of American and British bomber and fighter plane production with the United States producing more heavy bombers for Allied air forces and the British making more fighter aircraft.

Lyttelton's arrival in this country coincided with rumors of a growing disposition among American military and naval leaders further to nationalize United States rearmament. These rumors which, if true, would mean that more attention might be paid in this country to building up large American combat forces than to production for the Allies, were challenged by the latest available figures on Lend-Lease transfers.

The value of Lend-Lease aid in September was said to have been the highest since the program was instituted. In goods transferred the total was $44 million dollars, of which 75 per cent was in military items. Transfers of equipment plus services rendered totaled $43 million dollars.

81 Merchant Ships Added To U. S. Fleet

American shipyards during October added 81 vessels with a total deadweight of 890,700 tons to the victory fleet of merchant ships, the Maritime Commission disclosed yesterday.

The month's production brought the year's shipbuilding total to six million deadweight tons, two million tons shy of President Roosevelt's goal, but an official spokesman for the commission said there was little doubt the production of the next two months would put the shipbuilding program over the top.

The spokesman pointed out that the industry produced one million tons of shipping in September and said that new yards soon to come into operation together with improved production methods were expected to compensate for facilities lost through diversion to the manufacture of special craft for the armed forces.

Last month's deliveries of merchant ships was 12 short of the record-breaking production of 93 vessels in September, chiefly owing to diversion of facilities.

Of the 81 vessels delivered during October in 20 yards, 29 of them were made in three West Coast shipyards of Henry J. Kaiser, Kaiser's Oregon Shipbuilding Co. tied with the California Shipbuilding Corp., with which Kaiser was formerly associated, for top-production standing for the month. Each yard delivered 12 ships.

Defendant Hailed Viereck Book, Treason Court Told; Hushed Parleys Described

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Chicago, Ill., Nov. 4.—A Nazi propaganda book broadcast in America by George Sylvester Viereck was produced in Federal Court here today as evidence of the disloyalty of the alleged traitor, Otto Wergin.

Wergin was declared to have recommended the book called "It Happened Again," which Viereck published under an alias, as sound doctrine.

Wergin and five others are on trial for treason, with United States Attorney J. Albert Wolf demanding the death penalty, for aid and comfort to the spy, Herbert Haupt.

The others on trial are Wergin's wife, Kate, 44; Haupt's wife, Walter Froehling, 40, his wife, Lucille Froehling, 32, and Haupt's parents, Hans Max Haupt, 48, and Erna Haupt, 43.

Wergin fought in the German navy in World War I. His son, Wolfgang, was young Haupt's companion in a trip to Germany last year, which took both into the Nazi armed forces, Wolfgang as a soldier and Haupt as a spy who was caught and electrocuted three months ago.

Lorraine Demmler, 20-year-old school friend of both Wolfgang Wergin and his sister, Irene, took the witness stand today to tell what she saw and heard in the Wergin home when she lived there several months this year.

The theme of most Wergin conversations, said Miss Demmler, was that Germany was right, that Hitler was a great man, that everything was better in Germany.

"I got sick of hearing it!" the tall brunette exclaimed.

"Did you have any conversation with them about the way the war started?" asked Prosecutor Richard G. Finn.

"Yes; and in January this year Mr. Wergin gave me a book to read. The title of the book was 'It Happened Again.' Yes, that's it (as Finn held up the volume by Adolphus van Werth). I read it through."

The sensational trial in Washington, which sent Viereck to prison as a Nazi agent, brought the disclosure that he controlled the Flanders Hall Co.

Miss Demmler related that once Mrs. Wergin showed her a letter from her son, Wolfgang. Writing from Tokyo, he said, "I have a chance to see Omie."

Mrs. Wergin said "Omie" was Wolfgang's grandmother, who was in Germany.

Miss Demmler said that when young Haupt came to Chicago in June, as an enemy agent, the Wergin home was the scene of a series of conferences in hushed voices, in the German language which she did not understand. She said these kept up for about a week, until Haupt and his fellow spies were trapped and Federal agents moved in on their confederates.

And then, said Miss Demmler, while an agent waited in the front room to question her, Mrs. Wergin called her to the kitchen and whispered, "don't mention the letters!" Before the girl took the stand, the jurors were allowed to hear a second confession by the defendant

Froehling. This repeated the admission read in his first confession, that he knew Bingo Haupt's hostile mission, but gave more details.

Man, Wife Indicted As Spies' Helpers

New York, Nov. 4 (P).—A man and his wife, both naturalized citizens of the United States, were indicted today for treason by a Federal grand jury on charges of harboring, concealing and assisting two of the Nazi saboteurs landed on Long Island last June by a German submarine.

Herman Heinrich Christian Jacob Faje, 38, and his wife, Hildegard C. Faje, both of Astoria, Long Island, were charged in the true bill returned by the Brooklyn grand jury to Federal Judge Matthew T. Abruzzo.

The indictment charges the couple concealed and assisted Heinrich Harm Heinck and Robert Quirin, Nazi saboteurs, after the latter were landed on Long Island by a U-boat. The bill also charges the Fajes received $3600 in cash from Heinck as payment for their aid.

The treason charge carries a possible death penalty, or imprisonment terms ranging from five years to life.

Republican Women Happy Over Victory

Sees a Trend Farley Ignores 'Quit' Plea

By Leo W. O'Brien
International News Service Staff Writer

New York, Nov. 4.—James A. Farley, ascribing the Republican sweep in New York to a definite national trend, announced today that he plans to remain as Democratic State chairman.

Farley, who brought about the nomination of Attorney General John J. Bennett for Governor in the face of opposition from President Roosevelt and many powerful county leaders, ignored a demand by Harold Moskowitz, chairman of the Affiliated Young Democrats, that he relinquish the party leadership.

"As chairman of the Democratic State Committee," Farley said, "my efforts, for the rest of the term for which I have been elected, will be directed toward building the organization to its fullest strength for the campaigns that are to come."

Farley's term will not expire until April, 1944.

Meanwhile, as the smashing plurality of Governor-elect Thomas E. Dewey approached the 640,000 mark, Democrats sought crumbs of comfort from the debacle in the hope that final revised figures will reveal the reelection of Lieut. Gov. Charles Poletti and Representative-at-Large Matthew J. Merritt.

On the face of nearly complete figures, Poletti appeared to have been defeated by Thomas W. Wallace, Republican, by from 15,000 to 30,000 votes, but the youthful lieutenant-governor failed to concede defeat.

"The unofficial returns indicate a very close election," he said. "Pending the receipt of official returns and soldiers' votes, I am naturally withholding any comment."

Republican leaders insisted Wallace is elected, but they were uneasy over the possibility that a recheck would swell the Poletti total. With a Democratic lieutenant-governor, Dewey might be unable to obtain the support of the New York Republican organization for the 1944 Presidential nomination.

When Dewey is inaugurated January 1, he will dispose of millions of dollars in State patronage, denied to the Republicans for 20 years. Poletti's election, coupled with the possible nomination and election of Dewey to the Presidency in 1944, would turn that patronage back to the Democrats.

Merritt, whose defeat appeared certain early today, was leading Senator Charles Muzzicato, Republican, by 33,000 votes with many up-State districts missing.

Report 6 to 1 Win In Female Portion of Congressional Race

By Ruth Cowan
Associated Press Staff Writer

Republican women were jubilant yesterday at their 6-to-1 victory over the Democrats in electing petticoat law-makers to Congress. The National Democratic Women's Headquarters had no comment.

Miss Marian E. Martin, head of the Republican women's division, stating that this election saw women carrying 52 to 65 per cent of the voting power, credited women with being a decisive factor in the Nation-wide Republican upswing.

Demand End of Confusion
Their ballots proved, she continued, that "women demand an end to the confusion and contradictory policies emanating from the national Administration," she added:

"The women's vote indicates their confidence in the integrity and purpose of Republican candidates to concentrate all their energy and effort on the winning of the war."

"In no uncertain terms women have shown their demand for the preservation of our constitutional, republican form of government, firmly based on the two-party system."

In elaborating on her statement, Miss Martin said this election proves that women cannot be held in any one party. She said they flocked to the Democratic Party when it appeared to offer the one thing women want—security. "They are flocking away from it because they aren't finding that security," she continued.

Cause For Elation

Miss Martin was especially pleased by reports from New York State that the Republican woman candidate for Representative at Large, Winifred C. Stanley, won by a vote ahead of all men on the ticket except Governor-elect Dewey.

The Republicans elected all but one—Mrs. Rena Pikel of Illinois—of their seven women candidates for the House in the Seventy-eighth Congress, while the Democrats lost all but one of their five. The Democratic winner was Mrs. Mary T. Norton of New Jersey, veteran of 10 congressional campaigns.

The Republicans are sending two newcomers to the House—Connecticut's Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, blue-eyed blonde playwright, author and wife of Henry R. Luce of Time, Life and Fortune; and Miss Stanley, 33, a Buffalo, N. Y., attorney.

All Win Re-election

All women candidates for the House who sought re-election won.

These included, in addition to Mrs. Norton (D.), four Republicans—Mrs. Margaret Smith of Maine, Jessie Sumner of Illinois, Mrs. Frances Bolton of Ohio, and Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts, the latter unopposed for her tenth term.

One Republican incumbent, Jeanette Rankin of Montana, the first woman ever elected to the House, who returned in 1940 after 22 years to oppose the United States' entry into the war as she did in 1917, did not run for reelection. Nor did two Democrats: Mrs. Caroline O'Day of New York and Mrs. Katharine Byron of Maryland.

Mrs. Boland Unopposed
One Democrat, Mrs. Veronica Boland of Pennsylvania, was unopposed for election to serve out the unfinished term of her late husband, Rep. Pat Boland, which ends January 3.

Democrat losses included Mrs. Dorothy Kemp Roosevelt, divorced wife of the late G. Hall Roosevelt, brother of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt; Inez B. Peel, Pennsylvania representative-at-large, and Mrs. Elizabeth E. Pellett of Colorado. None of the 19 women candidates on minor party tickets won.

fell by the wayside to E. V. Robertson (Republican) and in Idaho, where C. A. Bottolfsen (Republican), nosed ahead of Chase A. Clark for the Governor's chair. Victory of Senator C. Wayland Brooks, a prewar isolationist, in Illinois, and of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, more sympathetic with Administration foreign policies than his famed grandfather, had been expected by even larger majorities. Among the small G. O. P. Senate group that had supported the President's foreign course throughout, Senator Styles Bridges of New Hampshire was safely returned. Nevada's Senate seat, which Republicans had claimed for their own, went to Former Representative James G. Scrugham, a Democrat.

The South returned its sitting Democrats in a body as expected, although here as in Northern and Midwest rural sections that swung Republican, farm dissatisfaction cuts deep. From conservative and traditionally Democratic Dixie, ironically may come some of the votes, which combined with Republican minorities in both Houses, can upset the Administration.

Senators riding back from the Southland and border territory included Virginia's Carter Glass, Bailey of North Carolina, John Bankhead of Alabama, O'Daniel of Texas, Maybank of South Carolina, Russell of Georgia, Ellender of Louisiana, Chandler of Kentucky, Stewart of Tennessee and Hatch of New Mexico, while Former Senator James O. Eastland replaced Wall Dooey from Mississippi.

Committee Positions Opened by Election

G. O. P. Victories Punch Holes in Present
Line-ups on Both Sides of Congress

By Edward A. Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Republican victories in Tuesday's election landlaid punched holes in the present committee line-ups on both sides of the Capitol, and cleared the way for appointment of at least three Senate and up to 15 House committee chairmen after the new Congress convenes in January.

The election also forecast a general realignment in the strength of the two parties in individual committees, although it was pointed out that on the House side, membership of many major committees has normally been fixed at 15 majority members and 10 minority members.

Defeat of Senator Brown (Democrat) of Michigan will open the chairmanship of the Senate Claims Committee, with Senator Ellender (Democrat) of Louisiana reported in line for the post. Senator Bilbo (Democrat) of Mississippi is expected to become the Senate Committee chairman when Senator Schwartz (Democrat) of Wyoming goes.

Civil Service Chairmanship

Senators Downey (Democrat) of California and Mead (Democrat) of New York are the chief contenders for the Civil Service Committee chairmanship being vacated by Senator Bulow (Democrat) of South Dakota. Downey can claim the post by seniority; Mead has been the Administration mainstay on civil service matters.

In the House, several of the most powerful committees were badly riddled on the majority side, among them the Military and Naval Affairs Committee, the Ways and Means Committee which handles taxation, Banking and Currency, and the Appropriations Committee. In contrast, the pivotal Rules Committee was virtually untouched.

None of these committees lost their chairmen, although the return of two, Chairman Cannon (Democrat) of Missouri of the Appropriations Committee, and Chairman May (Democrat) of Kentucky, of the Military Affairs Committee, was in the balance until late yesterday.

Probable Successors

The full committee on Disposition of Executive Papers was returned to office. They were Representatives Elliott (Democrat), chairman, and Gearhart (Republican), both of California.

In several of the committees where the chairmanship will be left vacant, the choice of successors was virtually certain. Buckley (Democrat) of New York was in line to succeed Smith (Democrat) of Washington, as chairman of the Pensions Committee; Boykin (Democrat) of Alabama to replace Kramer (Democrat) of California as Patents chairman; Allen (Democrat) of Louisiana to succeed Moser (Democrat) of Pennsylvania as Census Committee chairman, and Burch (Democrat) of Virginia to succeed Romjous (Democrat), Missouri, in the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee.

Top Four Defeated

The election cleared away the top four majority members of the Committee on Election of President, Vice President and Representatives. The fifth in line, Representative Worley (Democrat) of Texas, is slated to succeed Representative O'Day (Democrat) of New York as chairman.

In either committees the new lineup hinged on late results of several close races, with the following chairmanships already open:

Indian Affairs, being vacated by Representative Rogers (Democrat) of Oklahoma, who was not a candidate for reelection; Insular Affairs, now held by Representative Kocalkowski (Democrat) of Illinois, in the primaries; and the Roads Committee, now headed by Representative Cartwright (Democrat) of Oklahoma, defeated in the primaries.

Change for Trade

At the same time, Representative Bell (Democrat), of Missouri, another close winner, gained a chance to trade in his chairmanship of Elections Committee No. 1 for that of the larger Insular Affairs Committee. If he did so, Allen, of Louisiana, would have a choice of either the Elections or Census Committee chairmanship.

Others in line after Bell for the Insular Affairs assignment are Representative Gossett (Democrat), of Texas, now chairman of Elections No. 2, and Beckwith (Democrat), of Texas, eleventh in seniority, but the only one without a present chairmanship. Representative Domenguez (Democrat), of Louisiana, would follow Allen as candidate for Bell's present job, while Representative Murdock (Democrat), of Arizona, would be next to Allen in succession to the Census chairmanship.

Recreation Staff Hears Appeals for War Fund Support

Dr. Paul Douglass, president of American University, and Achilles Katsonis of the Greek society Ahepa, addressed the staff of the District Recreation Department yesterday morning and appealed for its full cooperation in the War Fund drive.

Douglass specifically pointed to the needs of our Allies, the desperate situation of the civilian multitudes in China and Russia. Katsonis spoke of the heroic fight his people have put up against the Axis, the consequent impoverishment of Greece and the extreme need for assistance.

The meeting, presided over by Milo Christiansen, superintendent of the Recreation Department, was followed by a film on the War Fund.

WEAK, BRITTLE FINGER NAILS

Calcium, one of the most important of all body

minerals, is required for the growth and repair of all body tissue—your heart, bones, one of the best sources, needs calcium, just as other tissues need calcium, and to substitute calcium for normal health and strength.

If your nails are weak and split, or so brittle

Boland, Democrat, deceased; Washington, Fifth District, Charles H. Leavy, Democrat, resigned, and Maryland, Second District, William F. Cole, Democrat, resigned.

Political classification of each State delegation as at present constituted in the Seventy-seventh Congress is indicated after the State name, and of each district, by abbreviation, preceding the district number.

Gains or losses of seats due to the 1940 census reapportionment also are shown after the State name. In States where district changes were made because of reapportionment the political designation of the district is shown as nearly as possible; new districts having no present member are indicated thus (-) before the district number.

(Where more than one name appears for the same district the race is still in doubt.)

4 Democratic Governors Bow to G. O. P.

Republicans moved at least four Democratic Governors out of office in Tuesday's balloting. With results in four States still inconclusive, they threatened tonight to vanquish even more.

Led by Thomas E. Dewey, who piled up a New York plurality of more than 500,000 over his Democratic opponent, State Attorney General John J. Bennett, Jr., Republicans won over Democrats in California, Connecticut and Michigan. In Wisconsin, however, Republican Gov. Julius P. Heil lost to Progressive Orland S. Loomis, dropping 100,000 votes behind him.

In California, Earl Warren, Republican, held a commanding lead of 145,000 over Gov. Culbert L. Olson, with nearly 10,000 of the 14,494 districts reporting.

Former Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin (Republican) Connecticut, defeated his Democratic opponent, Gov. Robert A. Hurley, by more than 25,000 votes.

Democrats, who gained no seats from Republican incumbents, were leading in three States—Idaho, New Mexico and Wyoming—while Republicans held a margin in Minnesota. In that State, Gov. Harold G. Stassen, nationally prominent Republican, was nearly 75,000 votes ahead of Hjalmar Petersen, Farmer-Laborite, with about half of the 3712 districts reporting. Stassen had 239,091, Petersen, 165,352, and John D. Sullivan (Democrat) 43,541.

The race was close in Idaho, with 100 districts unreported. Gov. Chase A. Clark, Democrat, had 68,061 votes to 67,612 for C. A. Bottolfsen, Republican.

John J. Dempsey, former Democratic House member in New Mexico, led Joseph F. Tondre, Republican, 30,789 to 20,556, with two-thirds of the returns in.

The race was close in Wyoming, where Lester C. Hunt, Democrat, held 35,843 votes against 34,257 for Gov. Nels H. Smith, Republican.

Drys Lose Contest In Massachusetts

Boston, Nov. 4 (P).—An effort by dry forces to ban the sale of liquor in areas surrounding big Army cantonments in Massachusetts went down to defeat in the State election—with the soldiers themselves casting few ballots.

The drys waged an active campaign in the Camp Edwards vicinity on Cape Cod, but the towns adjacent to the camp—Bourne, Barnstable and Falmouth—which were wet, stayed wet in a referendum vote.

Vote No Comfort To Our Enemies, Says Hoover

New York, Nov. 4 (P).—Former President Herbert Hoover, commenting on the election results, said today that "our enemies can get no comfort from this election" because "the platform of every single candidate—Republican, Democratic and Labor—was vigorous, efficient prosecution of the war."

His statement added: "There was a strong element of protest in the vote. But it was the protest of insistence upon more effective organization of the war. And that can be no comfort for the enemy."

"Those who believe in freedom everywhere will gain confidence from the demonstration that freedom can hold to its protective institutions even in desperate wars."

Bull's-Eye on Dewey

Gallup Vote Result Preview Registers Near-Perfect Mark

By Dr. George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion
Princeton, N. J., Nov. 4.—On the basis of virtually complete returns from New York State, the Institute scored a perfect bulls-eye in predicting the Dewey vote in New York City. And came within one-half of 1 per cent of the Dewey vote for the State as a whole. This duplicates the feat of 1938 when the Institute called the Dewey-Lehman Governorship race within one-half of 1 per cent.

On Monday the Institute pre-

Pendergast Ring Twice Repudiated By Missouri Voters

Kansas City, Nov. 4 (P).—The remnants of Tom Pendergast's machine, which once voted its men into Missouri's highest political offices, tried to elect one Circuit judge and unseat another in yesterday's State-wide election. Both efforts failed.

Machine-backed Judge Marion D. Walner became the first victim of Missouri's new nonpartisan court plan wherein the voter merely answers "yes" or "no" on whether a judge shall be retained in office. More than 31,000 rejected Walner although 27,000 favored his retention. The action cleared the way for Republican Governor Forrest C. Donnell to appoint a new judge from one of three names to be suggested by a committee composed of an equal number of lawyers and laymen.

Judge Allen C. Southern, who sits on Jackson County's other Circuit bench and who led a cleanup of gambling three years ago, drew vicious opposition from the Pendergast organization but his plurality of "yes" votes exceeded 26,000.

dicted that Dewey would receive 39 per cent in New York City and complete returns show that he received exactly 39 per cent. The Institute forecast a total State vote of 53 per cent for Dewey. And virtually complete returns indicate that this will be within one-half of 1 per cent. This accuracy is extraordinary in comparison to the normal statistical range of error of 4 per cent.

On Monday, the Institute predicted the Republicans would elect Governors in most of the populous States outside the South. On the basis of present returns, Republicans are sweeping these gubernatorial contests from coast to coast.

Low Turnout of Voters

The outstanding feature of the election is the phenomenally low turnout of voters. The Associated Press forecast a vote of 34 million, while the Institute predicted only 30 million. Present returns indicate that only about 26 million voted. This represents only 43 per cent of the eligible voters of the Nation, and less than one-half of the total vote cast in 1940. With the exception of 1930, that is the lowest turnout since 1928. The light vote delivered by political machines in metropolitan areas was a great factor in decreased Democratic votes. Also contributing was the fact that some five million men are under arms.

Slight Underestimation

On the basis of an expected turnout of 30 million, the Institute estimated before the election that the Republicans would receive 48 per cent of the total two-party vote cast for congressional candidates. Returns to date show that the four million drop in the estimated vote resulted in an underestimation of the extent of the Republican upsurge by at least 2 per cent.

Returns so far, plus the phenomenally low turnout, indicate that it is statistically possible for the Republicans to elect approximately one-half of the members of the House.

Marriage License Bureau Proves Love Laughs at War

The corporal and his girl edged shyly through the door and sidled over to the desk. The woman behind the counter smiled faintly. She knew why they were there and their shyness was an old story to her, but their studied insouciance made the smile appear.

"Is this where we apply for a marriage license?" the corporal asked, and the girl at his side gave his arm a little hug.

With a scratchy pen he filled out the form, while the girl leaned over the desk and looked at the questions and his answers. Now and then they commented on some point and laughed.

They had nearly finished it when the reporter and photographer walked over to them.

"I beg your pardon," the reporter said, "but we're doing a pictorial story on the marriage license bureau in wartime Washington, and we'd like to include your picture."

Corporal turned to girl and girl turned to corporal. Then they laughed, and, like Little Audrey, they laughed and laughed.

"What's so funny," the corporal explained, "is that we were talking when we came up here, and I said 'Now you'll have to look pretty for all the newspaper photographers who'll want to take your picture.' I was just kidding her, you know, and now here you are wanting to take our picture."

The soldier's name was William W. Loeb, and he said that he was a technical corporal attending the Capital Radio Engineering Institute and liked his work a lot. He'd been in Washington, at the school, for several months, and in the Army for nearly a year.

Corporal Loeb had known his girl, Helen Wells, for about a year and a half back in Rapid City, S. Dak., before he joined the Army, and a few weeks ago they decided they just couldn't get along without each other any longer. She arrived here last Sunday and the couple will live in Washington until Corporal Loeb completes his course and is transferred. After that the future is somewhat blank.

Corporal Loeb and his girl are good examples of the young people getting married in this wartime Washington; they are part of the reason why marriage licenses have jumped from 531 in October of 1939 to 1352 in October, 1942.

Naturally, not all of the marriages here are analogous to Corporal Loeb's.

A romance that started when both were War Department workers will be culminated in the marriage of Navy Yeoman Francis B. Fisher and Katherine Theresa Maras of Hixson, Minn. Fisher, who came to Washington from Harrisonville, W. Va., worked at the War Department before enlisting and met his fiancée here about a year ago. She works in the Surgeon General's Office. He got the license Tuesday.

Also at the license bureau was Florence Bennett, a native of Washington who works for the British Purchasing Commission. She and Corp. John T. Miller of the Army Air Forces at Craig Field, Ala., plan to marry. They have been engaged for four years. He came from Cumberland, Md., and worked at the Treasury Department before enlisting April 14. Corporal Miller will arrive in Washington soon on a 14-day furlough for the wedding at Calvary Methodist Church.

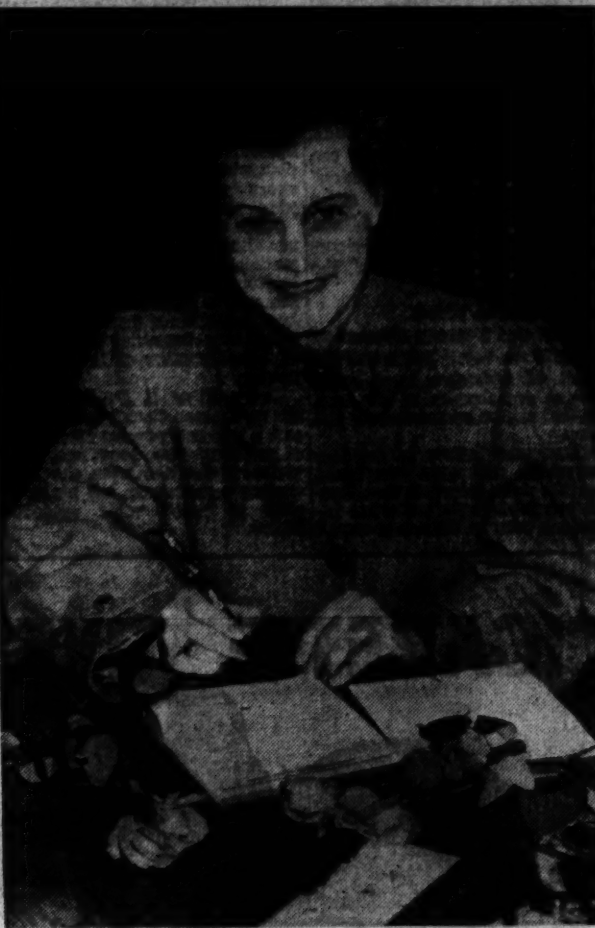

Alice Roselyn Dial, 22, of 3025 Fifteenth Street Northwest, who applied for a license, and Henry John Lindsey will be married November 9, the day after he is scheduled to graduate from the Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning, Ga. She met Lindsey, who came here from Rochester, N. Y., about a year and a half ago under the cherry blossoms at the Tidal Basin.

1 SHE GETS THE LICENSE—Florence Bennett of 1206 Tenth Street Northwest, reads her license to wed Corp. John T. Miller

3 BRIDE-TO-BE—Alice Roselyn Dial, 22 of 3025 Fifteenth Street Northwest, applies for a license to wed Henry John Lindsey, a candidate in the Officers Training School

4 HERE'S THE MARRIAGE LICENSE BUREAU in District Court. Clerks are busy handling applications and they will agree that love laughs at war

Red Cross Opens Day-Care Nursery

Nurse's Care—Mrs. Howard I. Cole, Army auxiliary nurse, braids an unruly lock of hair for one of her little charges as she attends the youngsters in their play. The children's mothers are wives of servicemen

Twelve wide-eyed youngsters, children of servicemen on active duty, are now being cared for at the new nursery operated by the Army and Navy Auxiliary of the Red Cross in quarters at Seventeenth and D Streets Northwest, donated by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The children were selected by the Home Service Division of the Red Cross, which deals with the problems of servicemen and their families. Preparations have been made to take care of 15 children.

While the mothers of the youngsters are hard at work doing their share in the war effort, the children are well taken care of by the Canteen Corps, Mrs. Sherman Trowbridge, chairman. Hot lunches at noon, and fruit juices during the morning and late afternoon comprise the children's diet.

The Army War College donated the beds and blankets for the nursery, the Engineer Corps of the Army stocked the kitchen, and the Quartermaster Corps brought the chairs.

Wins $75,000 From Old Firm

IT HASN'T made headlines, but Maj. Alexander de Seversky, famous Russian-American air expert, has just received a $75,000 cash settlement from the Republic Aviation Corporation for his part in designing certain airplanes now used by the Army.

DREW PEARSON

Behind this is a story of the petty intrigue and jealousy by Army brass-hats which is bogging down the war. Major de Seversky is one of the foremost aviation specialists in the United States, but has never been popular with the Air Corps. His English is not too good. His manners are persistent. He has definitely got on the nerves of certain high Army air-men. This war has proved a lot of his ideas to be far ahead of the Army, but that seems only to have deepened the jealousy.

Until 1940 de Seversky was a director of Republic Aviation. But in that year certain airmen made such strong representations to Republic about Seversky that he was dropped. Since Republic had taken over the old Seversky Aircraft Corporation, Seversky sued, and hired as attorney Alfons Lande of the prominent law firm headed by ex-Ambassador Joseph E. Davies.

Davies has a distinguished list of clients, including some of the biggest firms in the United States. Shortly after Lande took Seversky's case Davies received a call from Paul Moore of Republic Aviation, expressing the hope that no member of the Davies law firm would handle the Seversky case. It was also indicated that two important clients which the Davies firm represented would withdraw their business if the Davies firm also represented Seversky.

Davies, however, stood his ground.

"I can't see that there is any conflict between their interests and Seversky's," he said. "But if that's the way they feel about it, it is up to them."

Subsequently these two clients did withdraw. But Lande, of the Davies law firm, continued to represent Seversky and was about to negotiate a settlement for $100,000 when the Army stepped in again and urged Republic not to settle. As a result of the Army's last-minute intervention the settlement was finally scaled to $75,000.

NOTE: Walt Disney is now producing Seversky's book, "Victory Through Air Power," and is refusing diplomatic representation about the matter from the Navy. Seversky's friends say this is one of the few times that the Army Air Corps has been able to get full cooperation from the Navy.

Rationed Vice President

Vice President Henry Wallace is noted for abstinence. He does not drink or smoke, he eats in moderation. He does not even drink coffee. Now he has added another "abstinent" item to his bill of fare. He does not eat butter.

Wallace says, "Butter is an excellent food for children, but an adult like me, who is trying to keep his waistline down, can get along just as well without it."

Gauss and Mme. Chiang

HERE IS THE INSIDE STORY of why United States Ambassador Clarence E. Gauss has lost favor with the Chinese Government.

Gauss offended Madame Chiang, wife of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. He did so in what seems at this distance a perfectly innocent phrase, but those who know Oriental sensibilities, plus the tension created by our failure to send adequate supplies to China, will realize Gauss' blunder.

It occurred in a conversation between the three persons in Chungking. Whenever Gauss speaks with the Generalissimo, Madame Chiang acts as interpreter, since Gauss does not speak Chinese.

The discussion centered on United States aid to China, and General Chiang asked why deliveries had not been more substantial. Ambassador Gauss replied that he had reported China's needs to Washington and could do no more.

But the General pressed him further and Gauss, who is not noted for suavity, became somewhat irked. In reply he made reference to T. V. Soong, brother of Madame Chiang, who was then in Washington. He simply said, speaking to Madame Chiang:

"Why don't you ask your brother?"

This remark shocked the First Lady of China, and Gauss has been persona non grata ever since.

MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK

Dr. Townsend's Skids

IT WILL be hotly denied by Dr. Townsend, but his old-age pension movement, one of the most popular demagogic ideas ever hatched in the U. S. A., is cracking up.

Revolts against Townsend's leadership and his unfulfilled promises to get Congressional action on old-age pension legislation, are spreading all over the country.

One of Townsend's most prominent State leaders, B. J. Brown, head of the pension organization in Indiana, has broken away and is starting a rebel club similar to those formed in Michigan, Missouri, Colorado, Massachusetts and other States.

Florida Townsendsites also are straining at the leash. The Orlando, Fla., Club No. 1, one of the largest Townsend clubs in the country, has just withdrawn from the organization, charging that Dr. Townsend and his assistants have adequately accounted for only about $300,000 in nickels and dimes from old folks received during 1941.

NOTE: The Orlando Townsend Club inserted an ad in a Tampa newspaper stating that only $11,000 of $285,000 in membership contributions during 1941 had been spent to put over the doctor's old-age pension bill. The ad charged national officers with "financial mismanagement."

Politics Get Hot

PRICE BOSS Leon Henderson was put through a stiff third-degree about his method of fixing farm parity price ceilings when he appeared before the Senate Agriculture Committee the other day.

Farm bloc Senators charged that Henderson shouldn't have included farm benefit payments in fixing 60-day parity ceilings on farm prices, and one Senator, Ralph Brewster of Maine, bluntly accused the price chief of violating the law.

As the grilling got hotter—so did Leon.

"I interpreted the President's executive order as I understood it," he lashed back. "I'm an administrator, and that's my job. I'm not in politics."

"You say you're not in politics?" inquired Senator Burt Wheeler of Montana.

"No, sir!" roared Henderson.

"Well, you're in Washington, aren't you, Leon?" purred Wheeler, amid loud laughter.

Greater Unity Seen in Wake Of Elections

Boston, Nov. 4 (AP).—United States Representative Joseph W. Martin, Republican National Chairman and Minority Floor Leader in the House, asserted today that the election results were "cause for profound national gratification."

"We have seen free Constitutional Government and the American way operating at their best in the time of our greatest peril," he said in a statement. "Let the rest of the world, friend and foe alike, clearly understand that this election represents no division but the closest cooperation between all the people of the United States."

"Greater unity and more effective effort will result from the increased and fully justified confidence the people now have in the operations of their representative Government and the improved political balance we have achieved."

New Deal Check Cited
Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 4 (AP).—Frank Gannett, assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee, declared today his party's "great gains in the Senate and House will have a wholesome effect in checking the high-handed methods of the Administration in driving through its pet legislation."

"These big gains," he said in a post-election statement, "mark a definite change in the trend of public opinion, and give us encouragement that when the next election comes around, we shall complete the job."

He attributed the outcome to several factors. "The principal one," he said, "is dissatisfaction with New Dealism, to disappointment over management of the war, to intense resentment by food producers over treatment they have had from the Administration, to alarm over the muddling and bungling by the great army of bureaucrats."

"It all reflects a rising demand that we prosecute the war more vigorously and more effectively, with the people being kept fully informed on developments on the battlefronts."

G. W. to Offer Teachers Course In Mechanics

Plans for an "in-service training" course at George Washington University were inaugurated yesterday at a meeting of educational leaders of Washington, Maryland and Virginia. The meeting was called by Dr. James Harold Fox, dean of the School of Education at the university, and was attended by R. V. Billington, Office of Education.

The meeting, Dr. Fox said, came as a result of Army requirements that a high percentage of inductees have mechanical training. In order to meet these requirements, District and nearby schools with sufficient personnel will train high school students in elementary mechanics. Dr. Fox proposed that the curriculum of high school students include one year of basic electricity and shop work, and that high school instructors be trained so that they could teach the desired courses.

Community Players Elect Officers

Plans for three programs to be staged during the next six months were discussed at the biennial business meeting of the Community Players' Club, held Tuesday at Central High School. An informal report was made of the recent club production of the George S. Kaufman-Edna Ferber play, "Stage Door," and William Shaeffer was elected president and Hester Jewell secretary.

An invitation is extended to those interested in stage work. Meetings will be held at 8 p. m. on Mondays and Thursdays at the Community Center in Central High School.

More than 500 colored servicemen coming into Washington every week receive guidance, counsel and healthful recreation at Banneker Service Club No. 2, 2500 Georgia Avenue Northwest—a Community War Fund member. This service club is also a center of activities for hundreds of young women, newcomers to Washington, thus drawn into healthful recreation and supervised club activities. On Friday and Saturday nights dances for servicemen and young the Federal Works Agency. Its operation comes under the general supervision of Recreation Services, Inc., the operating agency for the War Hospitality Committee. Cooperating in the enterprise are the Welfare Recreational Association and the Recreation Department.

An example of the kind of assistance Banneker offers is the story of the soldier who ran out of funds on the fifth day of a 14-day furlough. The club provided his lodging, recreation and meals for the balance of his holiday, and made arrangements for his transportation back to camp. No AWOL for that soldier.

Colored citizens of the District are proud of this club. Their pride is reflected in their deepened interest in the Community War Fund, which supports this and similar centers for all servicemen. Colored teams in the Metropolitan unit this year expect to raise more than double any amount colored citizens have previously contributed to community welfare, according to Dr. Dorothy Boulding Ferebee, vice chairman of all the teams in this division.

War Fund officials, discussing Banneker, declared that the value to the community of any enterprise which provides healthful supervised recreation on such a scale, should be self-evident.

Government Moves on 2 Fronts to Crack Down on Defiance of Wartime Orders

effectively the country's labor supply without additional legislation. Morse delivered his warning to the mail order firm after John Barr, labor relations counsel for the company, said the company would reject any board order for union maintenance. The hearing was called to consider a recommendation of a unanimous three-man panel that maintenance of membership plus a voluntary checkoff of union dues be ordered for 5500 Chicago employees of the company.

"Ward's must reject any proposals which require it to enter into contracts which it believes to be illegal or to surrender principles which it considers to be fundamental," Barr said with respect to the maintenance recommendation.

No Precedent to Follow
Morse stated that WLB would have "no course of action to follow in the case of such defiance, but to meet it with whatever forces of Government are necessary to compel compliance," adding that successful defiance by the company would amount to "a major defeat on the home front."

"It means of course," he added "that the no-strike, no-lockout agreement is over if any company should be permitted to sustain itself in such a position, and American labor would be free then to resort to the strike, which I hope its patriotism would prevent it from doing, but nevertheless, it would be free to do it."

Reasonable Conclusion
In response to a question from Morse on whether he was announcing the company's intention to defy a board order, Barr said, "I think that is a reasonable conclusion to draw from the language."

Morse promptly launched into a lengthy statement in which he declared: "As far as my view is concerned, if we find on the merits of this case that it falls in the same category of other cases, such as the steel cases, the other cases in which we have ordered union maintenance, then it would be better for the duration of the war that the country go along without Montgomery Ward than that it try to go along with an economic situation under which the no-strike agreement would be destroyed."

Board to Meet Today
WLB will meet today to consider its decision in the case. Observers believed that if WLB order of union maintenance should be disobeyed by the company, WLB might ask the Postoffice Department to deny the company the use of the mails.

Modification Refused
The McNutt-Wickard telegram contained the Government's refusal to modify "grower or worker contracts" on the ground that they contain the minimum protection needed by workers and "adequately protect the growers against loss."

The 30 cents an hour minimum wage was originally established in an agreement between the United States and Mexico for the importation of Mexican workers.

WMC Efforts Hurt
"The War Manpower Commission and the Department of Agriculture call your attention to the urgency and immediate necessity for obtaining an adequate supply of workers to pick the long staple cotton crop in Arizona," the joint telegram to the growers said.

The telegram was drafted, it was understood, at a session of the War Manpower Commission yesterday, after Wickard pointed out that continued defiance of the Government was badly damaging the War Manpower Commission's efforts in the Southwest and that any program to control manpower with existing powers would inevitably fail if the growers were allowed to continue with their defiance.

Some small amounts of cotton have been picked in the last six weeks, but at slower than usual rates.

Aged Couple Are Wed in Lake Worth, Fla

Lake Worth, Fla., Nov. 4 (AP).—William Donohue, 85, and Mrs. Elizabeth King, 83, who went to school together in Wyandotte, Mich., 70 years ago, were married here today.

As children, they attended the same church, received their first communion and were confirmed at the same time.

Their paths drifted apart. Each married and neither knew the whereabouts of the other until they met five years ago in Lake Worth, where they have been winter visitors for several years.

Mrs. Donohue came here from Grose Isle, Mich. Donohue is from Colonial Beach, Va. He is a retired postal employee, having worked in the stamp department at Washington for more than 40 years.

Today's single ring ceremony was performed at the Sacred Heart Catholic Church by the Rev. James Cann.

Smoke gets in THEIR eyes!

UNION PACIFIC
Furnace fires glow and smoke surges from the stacks of thousands of industrial plants producing an ever-increasing quantity of planes, tanks, guns and other implements of war. That's the smoke that gets in the eyes of the Axis.

Raw materials and completed units are loaded on long rows of freight cars, go rumbling across country in a never-ending procession, hauled by gigantic locomotives followed by trails of smoke—smoke that smartens the eyes of Hitler and Hirohito.

Smoke 'em out!—that's our job. Union Pacific, the Strategic Middle Route connecting West with East, is doing its part by "keeping 'em rolling." Thousands of Union Pacific employees are working tirelessly—and buying War Bonds generously—for victory!

Old Gold

LOWEST IN THROAT-IRRITATING TARS AND RESINS

LOWEST IN NICOTINE

As shown by unbiased, independent, unsolicited tests of 7 leading brands—made for Reader's Digest

Reader's Digest was not trying to increase Old Gold sales or to emphasize the superiority of any one of the 7 cigarettes tested, when it published its recent report of cigarette tests.

On two counts, however—in throat-irritating tars and resins and in nicotine content—the smoke of Old Gold was reported lowest! These tests impressed many readers. Both before and since the publication of this article, many thousands of smokers have turned to Old Gold.

We urge you to try Old Golds, too. Get a pack—enjoy this famous cigarette today!

Fund Front

It was disappointing but not particularly surprising that, halfway through the Community War Fund Drive, returns were not up to schedule. The amount to be raised, $4,141,000, for the use of 121 organizations, is far and away the largest ever sought. And, in spite of lagging behind anticipated receipts, it was a considerable accomplishment to have raised $1,744,831—approximately 42 per cent of the goal—by the ninth day of the campaign.

Far more disturbing, it seems to us, was the fact that only one-fourth of the estimated potential donors contributed to the sum already raised. It is unreasonable, of course, to expect the burden of contributions to rest equally on all the members of the community. For, after all, ability to give is the prime consideration. Willingness to give, however, comes next. And if one-fourth of the potential donors have contributed nearly half of the money needed, it does seem that it is up to the remaining three-fourths, who have not yet contributed, to do their level best to help attain the goal.

It seems hardly necessary to repeat that the need now is greater than ever. For the fund includes not only the regular Community Chest organizations but also war-relief agencies and groups established for the benefit of men in the armed services. In the circumstances it is quite clear that if the desired amount is to be raised, it will have to be raised through the cooperation of the thousands of modest givers who have yet to be solicited.

Scraps Of Paper

A British soldier the other day picked up a scrap of paper in the Egyptian desert. It was, the reports say, a German soldier's permit, signed by his commanding officer, for three days' leave in Alexandria. This ought to be saved and given to a museum where it can be displayed together with a copy of Hitler's speech announcing that the war would be won in 1941, his order of the day declaring the Russian army was smashed and could never rise again, and his confident prediction of September 30 that Stalingrad would be taken, "you can be sure of that."

Capital Ships

There is one interesting aspect about the fighting in the waters of the South Pacific that has been generally overlooked. That is the role of battleships in the continuing engagements. About all we know to date is that the Japanese have continued using battleships, for just the other day a hit was reported on an old one of the Kongo class. This makes at least the ninth Japanese battleship that has been damaged, according to the unofficial naval box score. It is a striking reminder that, from December 7 on, the enemy has not hesitated to risk his capital ships. Considering reported hits, he has not done so with impunity, though we have claimed the sinking of but one Japanese battleship.

It is not at all clear, however, what the enemy has accomplished at this cost in battleships sunk or damaged, or whether he has used his newer and deadlier models. One gets the impression, nevertheless, that on occasion enemy battleships have been used to devastating effect around the Solomons. For example, when the whole story is released of the sinking of three American cruisers and one Australian cruiser during a night engagement August 9, we may perhaps learn that enemy battleships were largely responsible for the debacle. Nor does there seem much doubt that Japanese battleships have stood offshore and lobbed shells into American positions in the Solomons.

But if we know little about the use of Japanese battleships, we know even less about the use of our own. The presumption is that at least some of them have recently been in action in the South Pacific. But in line with the Navy policy of withholding information concerning damage, none has been reported hit, and the only one reported sunk is the Arizona, which was lost at Pearl Harbor. It may be, of course, that until quite recently, anyway, the Japanese figured that damage wrought at Pearl Harbor and the need for retaining capital ships in the Atlantic reduced the likelihood of large-scale American battleship operations in the Pacific.

But the Japanese can hardly assume that this situation will prevail indefinitely. For they know just as well as we do that new ships of the North Carolina and Iowa class will presently give our battle line an overwhelming preponderance of power. In this connection the major questions, therefore, are how many of them can be made ready for an offensive—of which we are already witnessing the preliminary stages—and how will they be used in a sea war in which battleships have played only a relatively minor role?

After The Elections

Too true is the saying that people are apt to value a thing only when they have lost it. The saying has some application to Tuesday's elections. As never before the American people—or those of them who were able to vote—luxuriated in the high privilege of voting. That was because they saw in their mind's eye freedom in a score of other lands from whom the right to vote freely had been snatched by the foulest tyranny that ever sought to bestride the earth. That was because they felt the nearness of the same peril to their own right. For these reasons, voting this year became a uniquely exhilarating experience for most Americans. It took on added significance because the act was a brief interlude in lives dedicated to a death struggle with the enemies of the voting privilege. It was as if we hammered home our basic war aim when we cast our ballots. That aim is the vindication of our natural right to choose the men and women who form our Government and to point the way we want to be governed.

It is only at election time that we get a clear, unmistakable demonstration of the swings in the popular will. Off years are just as significant in this respect as presidential years. For the last 50 years, with the exception of 1934, midterm elections have administered a jolt to the party in power. History repeated itself Tuesday. Though the Democrats have retained control of Congress, the Republicans made notable gains. These were notable not only because they were above the average gains in a midterm appeal to the people but also because they were scored during the high tide of a cataclysmic war. There was surely no precedent for Tuesday's balloting. In 1918, the closest analogy, the war had been won, and Germany was about to sign armistice terms. But when the people went to the polls Tuesday, none could see victory in sight. To be sure, the average American voter felt in his bones that eventually our arms would triumph. But all he knew was that before the glad day of victory a terrific price in blood and tears and sweat would have been exacted. It was in this sober and solemn mood that he registered his preferences. It was in this responsible mood that the people as a whole rebuked the ins, namely, the Roosevelt Administration.

Certainly there would be none who would interpret this rebuke as an antiwar manifestation. The President, it is true, some time ago expressed a hope for the election of candidates who were Roosevelt supporters before Pearl Harbor. But in this kind of intervention Mr. Roosevelt made the same mistake as President Wilson did in 1918. Mr. Wilson, in asking for the election of Democratic members of Congress, said that the Republicans, though prowar, had been anti-administration, and that a Republican victory would be regarded in Europe as a repudiation of his leadership. The answer to this kind of presidential interference was a shift in votes in favor of the Republican Party. Mr. Roosevelt's "hope" was similarly disregarded. And with more reason. Mr. Roosevelt's request was merely an invitation to the renewal of old and meaningless quarrels. The people, whose faces are turned forward and not backward, knew it.

Accordingly, men who were against Mr. Roosevelt and his foreign policy before Pearl Harbor were reelected, notably Representative Hamilton Fish and Senator C. Wayland Brooks of Illinois. But only the most purblind observer would see in these returns any sign of war weariness. If they did, they would have to account for the smashing victories of those Minnesota interventionists before Pearl Harbor, Governor Stassen and Senator Ball, and explain why that war hawk, Senator Josh Lee of Oklahoma, was beaten by a former Wilkie Democrat. Those victories were scored in precisely those areas where history has shown that war sentiment is weakest.

No, there was nothing antiwar in the voting, but there was a very patent dissatisfaction with the conduct of the war. President Roosevelt came back from his recent inspection trip with the conviction that the country was more war-minded than the Capital. Tuesday's elections are the testimonial of that fact. In the Capital the people see their own enthusiasm channeled only in part by a pusillanimous inability to come to grips with the great administrative task of gearing the entire Nation to war-making. They get a picture of a war machine in Washington which is creaking at every joint with jurisdictional disputes. They contrast their own unity and the Administration's calls for unity with the lack of unity even in the fighting services. This is a people's war, and yet the American people have never been taken into the confidence of the Administration either as to casualties or as to operations. An Administration which has demonstrated a lack of complete faith in the American people has found the compliment returned in the demonstration at the polls that the people do not have complete faith in the Administration.

It is such popular outbursts as occurred Tuesday that call for remedial action. Now Mr. Roosevelt has a mandate to repair the glaring deficiencies which this war has exposed. He can do so by making a model of efficiency and single-minded devotion to war-making out of his Administration. The first step is to establish a real War Cabinet. In the circumstances the present Cabinet would only be reacting to the popular will if they submitted their resignations to the President and gave him a chance to streamline his war administration. No step would be more responsive to the electoral verdict. Nothing would command more confidence. And we can think of no single move which would so demonstrate to the entire free world the operation upon the taproots of our governmental system of the voting privilege.

Under One Roof

It is hard at this time to be anything more than mildly skeptical about the plan to move the majority of Navy Department employees to the War Department Pentagon Building in Arlington by December. Secretary Knox, who said yesterday that the Navy will make the move, stressed some of the obvious advantages to having both services under the same roof. He emphasized, quite rightly, of course, that correlation of Navy and Army offices in the Pentagon would make for quick consultation. This sounds as though the services intend closer administrative cooperation all along the line. If true, that would naturally help the conduct of the war.

But if the most is to be made of the move, certain material obstacles will have to be overcome. The Army itself is not yet well established in the Pentagon. Consequently, a good deal of interoffice confusion still exists there. Moreover, the business of serving meals has not been worked out satisfactorily, nor has the transportation problem been solved. The Capital Transit Co. claims that since there are enough buses available to carry the contemplated peak force of 35,000-40,000 persons, the job involved is simply a matter of arithmetic. This makes it sound quite simple. But to superimpose Navy requirements on Army requirements that have not yet been met is to invite even more serious bottlenecks not only of transportation to and from the Pentagon but of traffic within the building.

The larger view is, of course, to recognize that such bottlenecks are susceptible of improvement. In any case, improved administration, not greater personal inconvenience for many thousands of persons, is the major issue. That is an issue, however, that waits on the settling of what might be called a host of tremendous trifles.

Kokoda Retaken

In retaking the town and airfield of Kokoda, Australian jungle troops have done more than wipe out the last of the gains made by the Japanese in New Guinea in the period following July 31. It was on that date that Kokoda fell into enemy hands and, soon after, the Japanese were on their way up the difficult slopes of the Owen Stanley Mountains toward Port Moresby 60 miles away. Before that offensive had spent itself, the enemy had reached a point only 30-odd miles from the Allied base on the Coral Sea.

The recapture of Kokoda does more than set back the Japanese clock by three months. It suggests that the balance of military and air power in the New Guinea sector of the South Pacific front is now beginning to swing in our favor. Much still remains to be done before the enemy is driven out of New Guinea altogether. Buna and Gona must still be retaken and after that the Japanese must be driven out of Lae and Salamawa. This will involve not merely air power and military force but also naval action. In view of what has been happening in the Solomons recently, that may delay the ultimate recapture of New Guinea. However, the punishing raids which General MacArthur's air force has been carrying out against Japanese positions in New Guinea have made the Japanese occupancy of the great island to the north of Australia an expensive matter indeed.

Japan's difficulties in New Guinea are intensified by the difficulty of getting in reinforcements and supplies. That was proved by the failure of a large Japanese convoy to land 7000 troops on the northeast coast as had been planned. The convoy was so harassed by Allied bombing raids as to be forced to turn and flee, with one direct hit made on a transport and five Zeros shot down. In this connection Kokoda, which has a small but usable airfield, will give the Allies a base for aerial operations 60 miles farther than any they have been able to employ during the past three months.

HILLS LIKE THESE

Together we watched the darkened hills
Fall softly into the arms of the night.
And we were moved by their friendliness,
Their warmth. We thought of hills like these Rocked and torn by bombs, earth which knew
The gentle flow of rain, soaked in the heaviness of blood. We thought of sleeping hills
Where lovers walked, made vows, and dreamed,
To know that a year from now, or even a month,
And I too may have gone where the warm earth
Heaves and pounds under the deadliness of war?
We clasped our hands firmly; if the sacrifice is ours, we will keep the gladness in our hearts,
Knowing that we shall have given that others
May walk these hills, and dream, and build!

Letters To The Editor

"Praise The Lord"

On Sunday, November 1, 1942, there was published in The Washington Post an article to the effect that Chaplain McGuire of the United States Navy did not make the statement, which has since become famous in song, "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition." This article went on to state that Chaplain McGuire had at no time actually engaged in any combat duties and had he done so, it would have been a violation of the Geneva Treaty.

In this connection, we wish to call your attention to the fact that at the time this expression was supposed to have been uttered, the United States was not formally at war with any nation and that the armed forces of the United States stationed at Pearl Harbor were the subject of an unprovoked attack by air and sea forces which later proved to be those of Japan. If you will recall, radio commentators who were describing the attack in Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, hesitated to identify the attacking planes as Japanese.

Due to the circumstances under which this attack on the armed forces of the United States occurred and the legal status of this Nation according to the rules of international law on this date, it is our opinion that the encounter which took place at Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, should be considered not as a battle between the armed forces of two sovereign powers, but as individuals protecting themselves from an unprovoked attack by persons whose standing should be considered as comparable to that of pirates who might attack a peaceful ship or community. For these reasons, we believe that participation by Chaplain McGuire in this battle, providing such participation had occurred, would not come within the purview of the Geneva Treaty.

In any event, it is about time that we discontinue the practice of abiding by treaties and rules of warfare and applying the humane rational rules set down for the conduct of warfare to a conflict with an inhuman, irrational enemy to whom the rules of warfare apply only to the opposing forces.

An Italian Hero

The report that Italians took part in the recent R. A. F. raids on Milan and Turin recalls the exploit of Fortunato Picchi to which I have seen no reference in American newspapers.

A brief announcement in an Italian journal some months ago ran to the effect that "Fortunato Picchi" was shot yesterday at a place near Rome.

Picchi was one among hundreds of Italian waiters who used to serve in the Little Soho restaurants in London, but the manner of his death may well make his name immortal. Seeing the resistance of the people of London, he had learned the meaning of freedom, and long before most of his fellows appreciated that this was a struggle between civilization and slavery. He enlisted in the R. A. F. was trained as a parachutist, and went as a guide in the early raids of the British on southern Italy. Descending on his native land he was captured and suffered the almost inevitable fate.

An English newspaper commenting on the episode said: "For the time being Italian freedom remains buried, but its spirit lives 'at a place near Rome.' When it is resurrected the name of Fortunato Picchi will be written up beside that of Garibaldi."

Paradox

I am always greatly interested in reading my daily morning Washington Post and feel encouraged and braced-up for my daily work when I read always of the grandiose victories which the Russians, the British, the Yanks and Australians as well as our brilliant Navy win every day over the disorganized, badly led and broken German and Japanese armies. This is wonderful and reassuring. Yet, there is one very puzzling question which I can not solve. Since victories are supposed to yield advantages to the victor, why and how is it that the Russians, the British, our Marines, etc., after all their daily magnificent victories, do not get anywhere?

The British forces under the superb leadership of the great strategist General Montgomery, began their splendid attack in Egypt some three weeks ago, and, after many crushing defeats administered to the broken army of General Rommel, are still where they were when they began their overwhelming attack. Why do they not go forward? The same thing seems to be true of the Russians. Despite their brilliant successes, as published in your good paper, the Russians are still where they were three months ago. And the battle in and around Guadalcanal, although a crushing defeat for the Japanese on land, sea and in the air, is still going on.

I, and probably most Americans, are dumfounded. Is there any good explanation for this seeming paradox? Of course, it might be that the effects of all the great victories won by the Allies over the surely already beaten Axis powers are deep military secrets which must be carefully kept from the knowledge of the enemy. And to divulge our successes to the American people would, of course, destroy the spirit and advantage of secrecy.

More Enthusiasm Now

The letter in The Post of October 26, 1942, by Joseph Stanley is significant and inspiring. Especially at this time when the future seems to most of us to be dark and unclear should we stress "our need"—a deep religious consciousness.

Mr. Stanley strikes in his letter that "The present bitter struggle must teach us to be more religious if the future is to hold an improvement over the past."

This seems to me to be an expression of a true enthusiasm. But then only those who have pure motives can be truly enthusiastic. Therefore not to be apathetic about our future, or the future of democracy, we must become more enthusiastic in our voting and in our daily living. This requires more pure thinking and the valuation of our neighbor as spiritual beings first of all.

The American people certainly have always had the greatest opportunity to not only think more purely but to also act more purely. So why not now?

MAY GOULD.
Washington, Oct. 21.

Give Credit Where Due

To fully understand and appreciate America, its Government, people and its way of life one must have been born and lived in other countries, as well as had some dealings with other governments. I have had all these and found how much more democratic and superior in every other way our own Government is. It hurts me to see many unjustly criticizing our leaders and the activities of our Government without carefully considering whether they have real cause to do so, or whether or not they are aiding our enemies by doing so.

For years our Army and Navy were both given the run-around and denied the most vital necessities, and now people who use all their influence with Congress to deny our armed forces the implements of their trade complain the loudest. Are they so blind as not to see how they continue to harm us in the eyes of our Allies as well as smother our own fighting forces? If they are really concerned and want to help they can contact the particular individual whom they find to be in error. When this does not help, they should approach his superior, then the Cabinet member concerned, and if all fail, the President. Thank God that He gave us a man for President who does not play around when he hears of deficiency, but eliminates it in no time. Such a procedure in wartime is the only safe way. If one really loves America. When one praises and shows appreciation of loyal service one accomplishes a lot more. It encourages those who are good and brings the others in line, too, because everyone wants praise and does not want to be outshone by his colleagues.

We are the richest nation on earth and we pay our Government workers less than any other nation, but we are very generous with kicking them around and discrediting them before the world. What does one think of a family which always fights? The same applies to a nation.

Free speech and free press are the most sacred rights, but during wartime in a world of intrigues and treacheries these privileges can be greatly abused, if we are not careful, and increase our casualties, as well as prolong the war.

Teen-Age Training

Why do the American Legionnaires, who really know that a year's military training is required for preserving many lives if men are sent abroad to fight, not get in touch with members of Congress and urge that the amendment be made a part of the bill? No doubt, a small minority are publishing to the world that they think it best not to give the year's training. Why do they think our boys should be sent first or at the same time with those of Europe and other foreign fields, where they have sufficient manpower (not mere boppers)? We need the boys right here in this country to help produce food, weapons of war, and all the other essential things of life, and if they are left here we can defeat the enemy more quickly than if they leave the country in the hands of the older people and incompetents of different races and color.

The Post Impressionist

Mr. Sycamore

The National Theater has been buzzing since "Mr. Sycamore" has come to town. His role as John Gwilt in the new Theater Guild play has an arresting quality unknown in any other of his previous productions. These close to him in the theater world know Mr. Stuart Erwin in his pleasant manner with a personable countenance which has captivated countless thousands of film stars for 14 years. However, in his new fantasy role he plays the unusual character of a tree.

"Isn't it odd, Mr. Erwin, that you should play the star role in 'Mr. Sycamore' and be so close to a popular summer resort as Sycamore Island, located on the shores of Maryland?" we asked.

"But where is this Sycamore Island?" asked Mr. Erwin.

"It's located a little below Glen Echo, where thousands are drawn from Washington, Maryland and Virginia for their 'Coney Island' treat during hot summer days. Here one can enjoy his merry-go-round moments to his heart's content."

The recent flood caused a host of club members and friends to congregate. Looking around we caught a familiar face, a staunch member of Sycamore Island Club for more than a quarter of a century. With spark in his voice, William Partridge advised that the clubhouse was holding up on its strong steel structure, last rebuilt in 1936, after a heavy flood had washed away the old clubhouse of more than 50 years and floated it down the river.

"Down the towpath," said Mr. Partridge, "there is a great empty spot, and the members know the loss it suffered when its huge was washed down the crest of the Potomac, as the old cable wire snapped. Our assistant, Edward Hawkins, will feel the loss considerably, for it was he who pulled the familiar cable, taking hundreds of people across to the clubhouse for more than 30 years."

Sycamore Island is a place de luxe to relax and forget the humdrum and monotony of life. The Sycamore Club includes scientists, botanists, architects, chemists, Army, Navy and Air Corps staff, business and professional men and women, and Government clerks—a cross-section of Washington from all walks of life. Those who have forgotten their play days are brought back to their days of youth.

The quiet majesty of the towering sycamore trees, the soothing sounds of the river flowing gently over the falls, a mile down the stream, the snail patterns through the leaves, combine to soothe and rest one burdened by daily duties and worries of workaday life in a war-torn world, for recreation and relaxation. On Upper Sycamore Island one can "rough it" to his heart's content.

The original clubhouse was built in 1885, and in the year of the Johnstown flood, in 1889, the Potomac rose above the height of the clubhouse, moving it downstream. It was replaced in its original spot, until 1936, when another "big flood" reaching a height above flood level, washed away the clubhouse and bathhouse containing more than 80 canoes.

The present building was designed by John Loehler, an engineer, who is a member of the club. Its steel frame, of bridge construction, was designed to resist the stress and strain of any future floods.

Cranes and herons fly leisurely to roost at night, while canoeists are startled by attractive ducks. There was an offer seen for a number of years by club members, but he met an untimely end at the hands of amateur hunters. A family of possum hole up in one of the hollow trees on the island, while occasionally a throttled possum, washed to the edge, tells the tale of a roaming mink.

Midway of the C. & O. Canal lies Snake Island, where Commander Byrd, better known for his Antarctic ventures, was wont to pitch his tent on Saturday nights in his younger days. Traces of an ancient road leading to a fordable strip of river above Sycamore seems to "mark the spot" where Braddeck crossed to Rockville en route to his defeat at Fort Dettingen.

"It will be dawn soon," said John Gwilt, performed by Stuart Erwin, as he stands in the foothold of Mother Earth, turning slowly but surely into a tree, in accordance with the theme of the comedy, "Mr. Sycamore," written by Ketti Frings and based on the story by Robert Ayre, produced by the Theater Guild.

"It will be dawn soon. It is wonderful to be in the rain, the fresh rain in the spring twilight," said Mr. Gwilt.

"Have you decided what kind of a tree you want to be?" was asked. "I have not decided," said John Gwilt.

"I am going to help you," said Jane Gwilt, played by Lillian Gish. But Eselle Benbow, performed by the poetess, Claiborne Foster in the play, arrives at the solution when she says:

"I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.
A tree whose hungry mouth is breast,
Against the earth's sweet-flowing
breast, . . .

And the choice made is for a Sycamore Tree, firm, strong and hardy.

And so Washington welcomes "Mr. Sycamore" to town and trusts it will have many visitors and callers on the threshold of the National Theater, and when next off on a spree or picnic, Mr. Sycamore, we hope you will visit Sycamore Island for recreation and Nature's best.

This Morning

With Shirley Potich

The most realistic approach to the business of getting tough seems to have been taken by the University of Maryland which this week decided to abandon for the war's duration all sports except the four body-contact games of football, boxing, basketball and lacrosse.

Athletic Director Clark Shaughnessy has given the heavy-ho to other sports which always have been deemed essential to a well-rounded college program. The time to fill the Nation's need for muscular youths with a competitive fury is too short, Shaughnessy reasons, to keep fooling around with such unviolent sports as tennis, golf, baseball, wrestling and cross-country running.

There's no disposition to dispute Shaughnessy who announced many months ago when he took the Maryland job, that his first concern would be to turn out athletes toughened to violence. Shaughnessy was one of the first big-shot physical education men to appraise the fitness of the Nation's youths in terms of the new kind of warfare in World War II, which puts a heavier strain on the individual soldier or sailor.

"The good soldier in this war is the man who can withstand shock," Shaughnessy declared shortly after Pearl Harbor. "Not only to withstand shock, but to keep going. That's why football and boxing are the best preparation for the boys we are sending to the fronts. On the gridiron and in the ring, they learn to react after they've been hit. They don't get that on the tennis courts or the golf links."

He might have added that the athletes don't meet up with much violence, either, on the baseball diamond. The only body-contact ballplayer encounters is when he slides into a base, and not infrequently there have been two-hour ball games in which not a single slide has occurred. Baseball has its recommendations, of course. It takes a sort of courage to stand up there against a fast-ball pitcher in the knowledge that one misjudged pitch could net a cracked skull, or worse. But the body contact that Shaughnessy likes is virtually nil in baseball.

When Shaughnessy speaks of experience with violence as an asset to the men of the fighting forces, he is paraphrasing the motto of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station's physical director of the last war. It was he who first said, "Football breeds familiarity with violence, war is violent."

And Commander Tom Hamilton, head of the U. S. Navy's pre-flight school physical training program, used an old football expression to justify football's place at the pre-flight schools. At a Georgetown University football luncheon this week, Hamilton declared, "What do our boys learn to do when they play football? What do the coaches teach them? They tell them to 'knock 'em down! Knock 'em down!' Well, that's exactly what these boys will be trying to do when they graduate and go up in our planes against the Germans and the Japs. They'll know that the thing to do is knock 'em down! Knock 'em down!"

Shaughnessy's elimination of such as golf, tennis and baseball should be interpreted as no slur on those noncontact sports. There's a place for 'em, but in peacetime; not in time of war for a Nation that admittedly has been soft physically. The noncontact sports might produce physical fitness and stamina, and the quality of courage, too, but missing is that familiarity with body-shock that Shaughnessy has learned to esteem.

It has been debated with some success by the proponents of golf and tennis, that they are more valuable sports than football and baseball in a college program. They point out that in later life the man who chose tennis or golf in his college days always had a ready recreational outlet. In contrast to the boy who played only football or baseball, he wouldn't have to round up a couple of dozen friends to have a friendly game. One more party and he was all set, while the baseball or football addict had to get a vicarious thrill out of becoming a spectator at the games he used to play.

But Shaughnessy says that such as golf and tennis and baseball are nonessential sports in a college program at this time, and who is there to gainsay him? General McArthur has surrounded himself with men who played football at West Point. He likes to have tough guys around.

Despite the modern comforts the warring nations try to give their fighters, the men in this war are being asked to undergo more privations than in any other. They fight in jungles, on the deserts, in small boats at sea and cramped in planes that scarcely admit them, and their tours of duty are long. It places a heavy premium not only on physique but on resourcefulness. And where, Shaughnessy asks, can a man learn to be more resourceful during combat than on the football field or in the boxing ring?

He makes sense.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 4.—Jockey club supernumeraries who are yanking petulantly at their Van Dykes, and hocking their Van Goghs, because Occupation, Count Fleet, Alsab and Whirlaway either will not or might not appear for Belmont's historic week of charity racing should sink back into their leather chairs at the Union League Club and relax with a rare old brandy burp. The week will be a success.

We think that few horse-players care about turf immortals. A tie-bitten 9-year-old gelding, nerved in every leg and so full of hop that he gives off sounds like a freshly opened bottle of soda, is as beautiful to the eye of the average horse bettor as anything ever envisioned by Currier and Ives—if he wins. If he loses he's a goat, just like Whirlaway and all the others, when they lose. Either that or he was pulled.

We have decided that the Whirlaways, etc., have a comparatively limited audience, restricted to a tight little clique interested in thoroughbred breeding, plus that almost microscopic segment of the turf customers afflicted with sentiment, plus the handful of writers in the press coop. The average customer at a track goes there to bet, primarily, not to watch the classic stride, or "game try" of one of the fancier thoroughbreds.

We think that the least-read piece in the paper each day is the race story but, that even with fire and brimstone on the front pages, that the fine-print race charts, entries and tipster's guesses are devoured. If there is an exception it is the annual story written about the Derby.

The important thing to the 25,000 regular race customers in this area, who almost monotonously bet one million dollars a day, is that another week of racing is being given to them. Few know or care about the charity beneficiary. Most of them would show up for it if the management substituted armadillos, because armadillo touts would spring up on all sides and there would be enough whispered, and printed tips on this or that member of the dasyproctidae species (ah, there, Kieran!) to produce a nice turnout of bettors.

Art Rooney, coowner of the Pittsburgh Steelers, is rapidly turning gray and experiencing his first substantial headache in the National Football League. He has a winner on his hands and it's almost too much for him to bear.

Rooney made a lot of money out of the races here one season, four or five years ago. He is supposed to have pocketed more than $100,000 in one day. He sank most of it in the Pittsburgh team, but never got a break. He had trouble with Forbes Field and had to play some of his "home" games far, far from home. His best man, at the start, Whizzer White, abruptly quit the game about the time Rooney had a chance to exploit him properly.

This year, with Dudley and Sandig and a fine team around them, Pittsburgh has been doing fine. But the fact that it has a chance to make a serious bid for division honors, and make money, has changed Rooney from a happy-go-lucky "who cares?" type of fellow to a graying, cigar-chewing, nervous wreck who now dies a thousand deaths each Sunday afternoon worrying about his first good team. Sometimes the bad old days look pretty good to Mr. R. Every play now counts, whereas it used to be that the only suspense at a Pittsburgh game was the number of points by which his team would be beat.

This is a tough period of the year for the various bowl promoters. Should they take an option on this or that club . . . and, if they don't grab them now they will lose them later to some double-crossing bowl down the river? Right now the Sugar Bowl people would like to tie up Georgia and Boston College for that $75,000 New Year's game, but suppose Georgia Tech knocks off Georgia? Or suppose Fordham beats Boston College? Then the New Orleans game would be stuck with a couple of semiturkeys, while the conquerors are being snatched by the Rose, Cotton or Orange Bowl people.

Lions Defeat Providence in Home Debut

D. C. Sextet Scores, 4-2, Over Reds

Providence Team's Lack of Reserves Gives Lions Edge; Goalie Hit Hard

By Anne Hagner

The Washington Lions last night made their first home-town appearance before a crowd of 3500 and simultaneously scored their first victory of the season as they defeated the Providence Reds, 4 to 2, at Uline Arena.

Taking complete advantage of the Rhode Islanders' lack of reserve strength, the Lions showed many signs of their 1941 form as they outmaneuvered Goalie Mike Krakas, traditionally one of the best in the league.

Also balancing the scale in the favor of the hosts was Leo Lamoureux, a member of last year's squad who currently is on loan from Les Canadiens. Big Leo scored one of the four Lion goals and had a hand in several others to develop into one of the night's star performers.

The Lions' first goal came after 13 minutes, 15 seconds of the first period when Joe Brown, formerly of the Detroit Redwings, made his Washington debut an auspicious one by taking passes from Graboski and Lamoureux for the score. Otherwise the period was marked only by Lion rushes at Goalie Karakas, who made a series of easy saves.

Reds Tie Score

Providence's Tony Demarco tied the score after 7:37 of the second period when Webster drew the Washington goal tender to the left of the net and left a wide enough opening for the puck to slip through on a pass from Calladine.

From then on, however, the Reds were handicapped seriously by a manpower shortage as their squad of only 11 players had scant opportunities for rest against the superior strength of the Lions full squad.

In the space of two minutes two Washington goals whizzed past Karakas, the first when Lamoureux took a short pass from Sands for a Lion score at 15:23, and the second when Peggy O'Neill was on the receiving end of a beautifully set up play from Singbush to Trudel and flashed the red light for the marker at 16:55.

Dyk Scores

Hank Dyk, a familiar figure to Washington fans after a hitch with the Johnstown Blue Birds in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League, took passes from Mantha and Joe Brown for what turned out to be the final goal for the Lions at 5:02 of the third stanza. Just a minute and 1 second later, the Reds' Jack Forsey, a scout 10 feet from the Lions' net, slid one past Goalie Gauthier on passes from Steele and Andy Brown. Although it was the evening's last addition to the scoreboard, the tempo of the game continued unabated thereafter and the Reds played excellent defensive hockey to make up for their lack of reserve strength.

Karakas was showered with rapid shots from all sides but the Lions were unable to connect and played uneventfully in the Reds' territory.

New Haven Eagles Tie Indianapolis

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 4 (AP).—Bill Thomson of the Indianapolis Capitols scored two goals in the second period of an American Hockey League game here tonight, but the New Haven Eagles, still seeking a win after four starts, came from behind and pulled into a 2-2 tie.

Thomson, fronting a five-man assault on the Eagles' new goalie, Alec Woods, scored first midway in the second period and added another on a rebound shot just before the period ended.

Pittsburgh Six Upsets Hershey

Pittsburgh, Nov. 4 (AP).—Gaining an early lead with fast play and never letting up during the contest, the Pittsburgh Hornets tonight defeated the Hershey Bears 3 to 1 in an American League hockey game before 2500 fans. The Bears were leading the Eastern division of the circuit without a defeat.

Tony Hemmerling, back after a week's absence due to injuries, Norm Schultz and Pete Besonne chalked up the Hornets' tallies. Frank Daley scored for the visitors. Goalie Harvey Teno broke back into the Hornets' lineup in an auspicious manner, making 22 stops but Nick Damore of Hershey had 24.

Georgia's Passing Pride Passes a Trade Secret

Frankie Sinkwich, a virtual cinch to be All-American for the second straight year with the University of Georgia, goes through his passing paces for a photographer as the Bulldogs prepare for Florida. Last week he accounted for 230 yards, completing 17 of 33 passes against Alabama. Top left—Frankie's grip. Right—Spotting a receiver with those keen eyes and (below), ready to fire

Landis Rules Nats' Mallory A Free Agent

Chicago, Nov. 4.—K. M. Landis, commissioner of baseball, today declared Outfielder James Mallory a free agent and ruled that the Washington Senators and the Charlotte club of the Piedmont League could not contract with Mallory for three years.

Landis said that Clark Griffith, president of the Washington club, admitted an irregularity in transferring Mallory last summer to Burlington, N. C., of the class D Bi-State League but that Griffith contended the move had been made as a favor to the player, who had asked to be sent to Burlington.

Washington's agreement to option Mallory to Burlington, Landis ruled, violated the major-league rules which prohibit such transfer to any minor league club below class B. Landis quoted Griffith as stating that when Washington found it could not option Mallory direct to Burlington he transferred the player to Charlotte, a class B club, which in turn optioned Mallory to Burlington.

Landis said that no penalty was being imposed on Burlington.

Beazley Joins Army Air Ground Force

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 4 (AP).—Johnny Beazley, Nashville's pitching hero of the recent World Series, was sworn in as a mechanic in the Army Air Corps here yesterday.

He left immediately for Camp Forrest and after a few days there probably will be sent to Fort Oglethorpe.

"I figured I would be better in the ground crew of the Air Corps," he said. "I hope to return to pitching after the war and believe I would be better off in this branch of the service."

Improving Navy Team Hopes to Upset Penn

Middies Anxious to Knock Off Quakers, Who Licked Army; Game Is Saturday

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 4.—The Navy varsity football team has more than one incentive to be at its best Saturday against the University of Pennsylvania, and the Tars have been digging in hard in preparation.

In the first place, to knock off Penn would be a feather in anyone's cap, and the Middies view the contest as a chance to salvage something from a pretty rocky season. And in the second place, this same Penn team walloped Army 19 to 0 last week. If there is anything that Annapolis boys want to do now it is to put up a better showing against the Quakers than did the West Pointers.

On comparative records, the Philadelphia team rates a 2 to 3 touchdown edge over the Middies. The teams have played both Princeton and Yale. Penn beat Yale 35 to 6 and tied Princeton 6 to 6. The Navy beat Yale 13 to 6 and lost to Princeton 10 to 0.

But the Tars have been improving steadily, losing to Notre Dame's powerful Irish by a meager 9 to 0 count last Saturday, and should be all out against Penn. Navy scouts have reported Penn has two top-notch lines and a dozen outstanding backs combining power, speed and deception. All three factors must be mastered to defeat the Quakers.

Especially dangerous, scouts have reported, is Bert Stiff, the huge powerhouse fullback. He weighs 200 pounds and is a triple-threatener.

In practice this week Navy's two leading backfield operatives continued to be Gordon Studer and Hillis Hume, followed closely by Capt. Alan Cameron and Ben Martin.

This will be the twenty-seventh renewal of a series which began in 1888. Penn holds 14 victories, Navy 10, and two contests ended in ties.

Last year 70,000 fans jammed Franklin Field, Philadelphia, the scene of Saturday's contest, to see the Middies defeat Penn 13 to 6.

G. W. Primes Paul Weber For Clemson

Coach Johnny Baker will send his George Washington Colonials through a final light drill on the home field before leaving this evening at 11 o'clock for Clemson, S. C., where they are scheduled to meet the Clemson Tigers Saturday afternoon.

In an effort to avoid injuries before game time, Baker has held only one workout this week that might constitute anything like a heavy scrimmage. "We can't take unnecessary chances with the manpower we have available," the G. W. coach said yesterday. "We're going to need our top performers most of the game Saturday, and I want everybody in good shape."

One player who is likely to get a big chance against the Tigers is Paul Weber, the boy that unwound some corking runs in the Kentucky contest Friday. With his 19 points, Weber is the chief G. W. scorer to date and is No. 3 among the members of the District area's three major teams.

He has proven his ability to carry the ball and his defensive play has greatly risen since last season. He knocked down several Kentucky passes which could have meant touchdowns and pulled a number of brilliant tackles. If the Pennsylvania boy doesn't start Saturday, he is certain to go in before many minutes of the contest have elapsed.

Friends Juniors Down St. Albans

Tony Dean and John Lynd starred yesterday as Friends School Juniors defeated St. Albans Juniors, 13-0, on the losers' field.

Dean made the first score on the last play in the first quarter as he sprinted 20 yards around end. Lynd converted. In the fourth quarter Lynd dashed off tackle, eluded the field and raced 50 yards for the tally.

Other outstanding men for the winners were quarterback Jimmy Balderston, center Jack Hecker and Arthur Nordstrom.

Hurricanes Hold Foes Scoreless

Tulsa Averages 422 Yards Gained Each Game; Score 296 Points to 0

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 4.—Those impersonal judges—the game statistics—vote the Tulsa Golden Hurricanes as the Nation's top football team, both in offense and defense.

Tulsa, in winning six straight games and scoring 296 points while keeping its goal line uncrossed, has averaged better than 422 yards by rushing and passing while limiting its opposition to about 90 yards a game—less than the length of the field.

The American Football Statistical Bureau, in reporting today on Tulsa's sensational brand of play, pointed out the Hurricanes have been the total defense leader for four straight weeks. They hovered in third place in total offense for three Saturdays, however, before taking over the top berth this week from Missouri.

Buckeyes Climb

The Tigers, after losing last Saturday to Great Lakes, tumbled to fourth place, with Ohio State—despite suffering its first loss, to Wisconsin—climbing from fourth to third. Georgia, rolling on the nightly impetus of Frankie Sinkwich's passing and running, retained second position.

Tulsa and Georgia are moving down the opposition at a pace never before recorded in the season. While the Hurricanes make 422.3 yards a game, Georgia forges for 412.9 yards, and these two imposing 400-plus figures cause the bureau's tabulating machines to stutter as they grind out the totals.

Ohio State's place is 394.3 yards a game while Missouri's is 392.4 and fifth-place Texas' 373.1.

Tulsa, stopping its foes with 90.5 yards of gain a game, is followed on the defensive tabulation by Detroit, whose opponents average 108.2 yards, Duquesne 117.2 yards, William and Mary 125.5 yards and Boston College 127.2 yards.

Columbia Next

The Golden Hurricanes built up a great share of their record on passing and pass defense. They have averaged 207.3 yards through the air followed by Columbia, 202.3 yards; Georgia, 194.7 yards; Maryland (with one game unreported), 161.6 yards, and Southern Methodist, 138.8 yards.

Tulsa limited its foes to 26.5 yards per game through the air and has intercepted more passes than its opponents have completed, 14 to 13. Harvard is second in pass defense by yielding only 34.3 yards a game, followed by Georgia Navy, 44.3; Manhattan, 46.3, and Yale and Bucknell tied at 47.6.

Hardin-Simmons boasts the best rushing average with 324.6 yards a game, while Boston College has the most impenetrable defense against its foes' rushing, yielding 27.2 yards a game.

Sure-Fingered Packers Make Few Miscues

Chicago, Nov. 4.—Possession is nine points in the law and the Green Bay Packers today emphasized that in the National Football League.

The packers, who are battling the world champion Chicago Bears for the Western Division lead in the National Football League, have compiled a remarkable record of keeping the ball once they have possession of it.

In six games the Packers have handled the ball on 586 plays. Over that stretch they've fumbled only five times for the best average ever compiled in the pro grid circuit; of the five bobbles, the Packers recovered two, with three going to the opposing team. Andy Uram and Tony Carr each fumbled twice and C. . . .

While building a record against fumbles, the Packers have been exceptional in opponent misplays, recovering the ball 11 out of 17 times.

Seek Record

The Chicago Cardinals had the fewest fumbles last season, 19. The Packers are almost certain to better that mark.

Green Bay leads the teams in yards gained by passing with 1479, in total yardage with 2224 and in pass completions with 85.

Pittsburgh is tops in yards gained by rushing with 1098 and the Chicago Bears in scoring with 193 points in six games.

Among the individual leaders Don Hutson and Cecil Isbell of the Packers are in the forefront.

The brilliant Green Bay pair helped set five new league records and tie two others Sunday as the Packers beat the Cardinals, 35 to 24. This week the Cleveland Rams are played at Cleveland with Hutson and Isbell standing a chance to break seven additional records.

Marks May Fall

Included among the marks that may topple in the Rams game are: Most touchdowns passes thrown in a season, all-time total of touchdowns, yards gained in a season on passes, individual scoring record, most points after touchdowns in a season and most yards gained by pass receptions. Hutson and Isbell are within striking distance of each of these records.

G. U.-Preflight Game Lists Ceremonies

The entire half-time program which will be staged with military precision within a period of 25 minutes, will be under the direction of the Flight Selection Board of the United States Navy, which maintains headquarters at 1320 G Street Northwest.

Eddie Agnew, Georgetown's senior quarterback, sharpens his eye for Saturday night's battle with North Carolina Prelight gridmen at Griffith Stadium. The 173-pound Philadelphia lad, whose light has been hidden until this year, is coming off the best performance of his career against Boston College last week. He bore the brunt of B. C.'s vicious tackling for three quarters without much help, was expected to be carried from the field at any time, but was in there calling his own signal at the end of a 47-0 licking by the Eagles.

Cards to Rely on Goldberg, Schwenk Sunday

Steve Lach, Chicago End, Impressive

1941 Duke Star 3d In Pass-Receive; Engage Redskins Here; Daddio Leads

Rookie Bud Schwenk, who in his senior year at Washington University of St. Louis last year set an all-time collegiate passing record, and Marshall Goldberg, Pitt's all-time All-American, give the Redskins Sunday opponents, the Chicago Cardinals, a one-two punch.

Schwenk has thrown more passes than any back in the pro league this year, 160; has had the most intercepted and has the poorest percentage with just 66 completed, but he's still dangerous.

Schwenk has able receivers in Steve Lach, the 1941 Duke ace, who in his first year under Coach Jimmy Conzelmann has taken over third place in pass receiving, Mike Copping, the former Oklahoman, a fine receiver and Frank Ivy, college and pro teammate of Copping.

Goldberg is fifth in the league in ground gaining with an average of 3 1/2 yards every time he lugs the ball. Schwenk, a triple-threat, is also in the first 10 ground gainers and he adds deception to his make-up as when Schwenk goes back he might pass or run. He has passed about twice as often this far.

The Cardinals have the leading field-goal kicker in the former Pitt back, Bill Daddio, who is the only player with four to his credit this season. Daddio has also scored a touchdown and kicked eight extra points.

Sammy Baugh will welcome the Cardinals as the Chicagoans have allowed the opposition more yards gained passing in seven games than any team in the league. In comparing statistics between the Redskins and Cards in games played to date, the Redskins have a slight edge in every important department.

The Cardinals asked waivers on two players yesterday, Dick Evans, an end from Iowa in his second year as a pro and Tom Chantles, tackle, who was acquired last week in a trade for Chet Wetherill. Chantles was a rookie from Southern California.

Top Price for Trotter Is $3500

By the Associated Press
HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 4.—Empire Hanover, full-blooded sister of Shirley Hanover, winner of the Hambletonian Stakes in 1937, brought top price of $3500 today as the first wartime auction of the Standard Bred Horse Sale Co. opened here.

The Hanover Shoe Farm filly was sold to Sheppard H. Foster of Hanover, Pa., and will race under their colors in new year's stake events.

Prices ranged from the $3500 sale tag to $70 as approximately 70 horses were sold during the initial bidding. The three-day sale will see more than 300 horses put on the block.

Show Winner to Get Oil Painting of Horse

Mrs. Benjamin Biays, Jr., with a painting in oils which she did of Betty Houghton of 3511 Davenport Street Northwest and her thoroughbred gelding, Judge Hastings. Mrs. Biays, who lives in Bethesda, Md., will paint a portrait of the horse which wins the hunter championship of the North End Horse Show Sunday afternoon near Silver Spring, Md.

Golf Body Queries Clubs On War Effort

The United States Golf Association has sent queries to 5200 golf clubs and 225 associations throughout the country in an effort to determine golf's exact war record.

Included in the questionnaire is the amount raised for the Red Cross, Army-Navy Relief, USO and other war agencies.

The war bond and stamps total in prizes, payroll savings and the amount invested and sold by the club is desired by the U. S. G. A.

Also the extent of free playing privileges to men in the armed services, reduced dues and green fees for service men and the number of clubs, balls and bags donated to camps.

The U. S. G. A. has set a November 30 deadline for replies and hopes to have 100 per cent cooperation from its member clubs and the sectional organizations.

Virginia Harriers Defeat Bridgewater

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 4 (AP).—The University of Virginia's cross-country team continued its undefeated form today by turning in a 21-37 victory over Bridgewater College.

The Cavalier's Bill Seelins and Bob Green strode in together in a tie finish, covering the course in 23 minutes 31.6 seconds.

North End Show Victor Gets Portrait

By Mrs. B. Biays

Most unusual championship award to be made in recent years will be offered Sunday at the North End Horse Show, near Silver Spring, Md., for which Mrs. Benjamin Biays, Jr., will paint a portrait in oils of the victor in the hunter division.

Mrs. Biays, the former Elsie Tuckerman, recently has painted a number of outstanding horses—U. S. Randle's Troop and Sport Marvel, just sold to a Cleveland, Ohio, sportsman; Betty Houghton's Judge Hastings, Capt. and Mrs. Alvin I. Kay's No. 1 Mistake, and two of the favorite mounts of Eddie Talbert, He'll Try and Golden Glow, which were destroyed in a stable fire several years ago.

Because of the surprise offer of the painting, owners of hunters are taking even more interest than usual in the North End Stables event, to be held on the hilltop just west of Sixteenth Street on East-West Highway, beginning at 1 p. m.

Thirteen classes are on the program, with trophies, cash awards and four ribbons to be awarded to winners in each. A large trophy will be given to the championship winner in the open jumping division. New fences have been added to the already formidable North End collection, and parts of the outside course will be revamped so that working hunter classes may be sent over it. Two conformation outings, for open and green hunters, will be judged inside the ring.

Ft. Washington Soldiers See Club Bouts

Before a packed audience in the Fort Washington gym, boxers from the Merrick Boys Club and the National Training School last night staged seven 3-round bouts for the soldiers of the Adjutant General's School under the capable supervision of Capt. Lawrence S. Reynolds, post athletic officer.

One of the outstanding bouts, between Domingo Ortiz of the National Training School and John L. Sullivan, ended in a draw after three rounds, three of toe-to-toe slugfests. Both weighed 120 pounds.

The judges for the matches were Major W. Brice and Lieut. J. Schuster. Ed Eagle was the referee and Sgt. A. Costanzo was the timekeeper.

One of the class—Romeo Hutchinson defeated Billy Bryant, both of Merrick. Hutchinson was a professional boxer and was working on a draw. Both of Merrick. Hutchinson was a professional boxer and was working on a draw. Both of Merrick.

Clippers Win Again

The Cleveland Clipper 110-pound team won another game yesterday. Davenport Tigers were the victims and the score was 37-6. Hardy Harrison scored four touchdowns.

Long, Long on Rough Stuff, Manages a Draw With Shapiro

Referee Casey Berger Among Those Involved In Three-Man Battle Royal at Turner's

Johnny (Tripod) Long, the wiry Floridian, and Morris (Muscles) Shapiro of Canada exhausted the entire dictionary of Commando tactics in their one-hour draw last night, which headlined the wrestling show before 700 fans at Turner's Arena.

The scuffle was as clean as a soap opera for the first 7 1/2 minutes, but Shapiro could stand the strain no longer, and he uncorked some slugging which proved the green light for practically anything that either performer could dream up.

Shapiro proved himself something of a Jekyll-Hyde personality for he was the villain of last night's drama, whereas last week against Jim London the Canadian was Little Lord Fauntleroy personified. However, Morris, one of the more articulate wrestlers, had a very practical explanation for his transformation. Afterwards, in the dressing room, he declared in a loud clear voice that he was strictly a mercenary who would adjust his conduct to whatever style paid the most in cash. To further elucidate, he stated in a sententious voice, "Why y'can't even ride a trolley if you don't have a nickel!"

Berger There, Too
Referee Casey Berger also played a prominent role last night in that he was battling Shapiro almost as strenuously as Long was. Berger insisted on keeping order, which Morris was allergic to, and the arbitrator pulled the culprit's hair, punched him occasionally, and even stomped on his neck.

Both wrestlers employed a complete repertoire of stunts and both exhausted the crop before the match was over. First Shapiro slugged and then Long threw punches to floor the Canadian. Both men were out of the ring frequently enough to become chummy with the patrons.

Late in the match Johnny pulled a coup by enmeshing Shapiro in the ropes by the neck and he left the fellow hanging there like a side of beef until Berger finally got him untangled.

However, they were too evenly matched for either to wear the other down in 60 minutes, and to the surprise of the crowd, the match ended in a draw.

Maurice La Chappelle and Ace Freeman retained their mythical two-man team championship of the Potomac River area by besting a villainous duo, Jim Austeri and John Vanski, in the best out of three falls.

This script called for hilarious comedy, which was very well portrayed by the foursome. Vanski was billed as the principal stooge and he received a lion's share of the alleged punishment. When the heroes weren't bawling on him, his chum, Austeri, was tying him in knots under the guise of thinking he was working on a draw.

The winners used everything offensive except the T formation in capturing the initial fall in 15 minutes. The end came just after Freeman had catapulted Vanski over the ropes for one of his numerous trips into the crowd. With him sitting in a fan's lap, La Chappelle landed onto the covering mat, with a full Nelson and Freeman booted the bad man in the tummy. Austeri dropped like

Toms' Rites Set Tomorrow

At Mt. Sterling

Funeral services for Raymond E. Toms, 55, who died Tuesday night at Doctors Hospital following an illness of several months, will be held tomorrow at Mount Sterling. Mr. Toms was chief of the division of design of the Public Roads Administration, Federal Works Agency. He was in charge of the design of the Mount Vernon highway.

For several years he had directed the design of Federal-aid roads in conjunction with State highway departments. He was a native of Frederick County, Md., where he attended school. He graduated from Cornell University with a degree in civil engineering in 1907.

He served with the 127th Field Artillery in France from 1917 until 1919. He returned to the Bureau of Roads in 1919.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Paulina Toms, two children, Raymond E. Toms, Jr., and Margaret Toms.

He lived at 20 East Woodbine Street, Chevy Chase, Md.

Mrs. Rosie Johnson Rites Set Today

At Rockville

Rockville—Funeral services for Mrs. Rosie A. Johnson, 70, wife of Walter Johnson, who died Monday at her home near Rockville after an illness of two weeks, will be held at St. Mary's Catholic Church, Rockville, at 9:30 a. m. today. The Rev. Thomas J. McKew, pastor of the church, will officiate and burial will be in St. Mary's Church Cemetery, near Rockville.

Besides her husband, she is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Fred Wilkerson, Westmore, Md., and Mrs. William Johnson, Washington, and a son, Robert Johnson, near Rockville. She also leaves two brothers, a sister and 20 grandchildren.

Before taking up her residence near Rockville 16 years ago, Mrs. Johnson, who was formerly a Miss Allen, lived in Washington the greater part of her life.

Daniel A. Hickey, G. M. C. Executive, Dies Here at 46

Daniel A. Hickey, 46, General Motors executive here, was stricken ill yesterday at a business meeting at the Shoreham Hotel and died a few minutes later.

When Mr. Hickey was taken ill, Miss Betty Tripp, resident nurse at the hotel, who lives at 1808 Kilbourne Street Northwest, was summoned and administered first aid. The executive was pronounced dead by Dr. R. L. Eiter of Emergency Hospital.

Mr. Hickey, zone manager of the Oldsmobile division here, lived at 3616 Davenport Street Northwest. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Ruth T. Hickey, two sons, John E. Hickey, 17, and Donald F. Hickey, 13, and his father, Edward A. Hickey, of Boston, Mass.

A native of Boston, Mass., Mr. Hickey went with the General Motors Corporation 15 years ago and came to Washington in 1929.

Born in Charleston, S. C., Mr. Atkinson was a graduate of Clemson College, S. C. Before moving to Silver Spring four years ago, he was a resident of the District for eight years. He was married to his wife, Mrs. Mary Atkinson; two daughters, Misses Joyce and Janet Atkinson, and two sisters.

Montgomery Now Faces Job Of Drafting County Charter

Montgomery County charter committee, who were successful in putting across the first charter in Maryland's history in the Tuesday elections, yesterday began preparations to undertake their next and "much harder" job, that of drafting a new system of government for the county.

Allen H. Gardner, president of the charter committee, yesterday said that the winning of the charter fight was a relatively easy job and called upon the citizens of the county to cooperate with the newly elected charter board in drafting the best possible charter.

Vote Again in 1944

Under the constitutional provision that made the charter drive possible in Maryland, the charter board will draft a new governmental system within the next six months and the people will decide at the 1944 elections whether they want to accept the board's changes. Although the law does not require the charter board to hold hearings on their proposed changes, the hearing will be held both before and after the charter is drafted, Gardner said yesterday. Charter proponents declared that the success of the charter movement was directly responsible for the defeat of Col. E. Brooke Lee

Col. John Wade Rites Tomorrow At West Point

Burial services for Col. John P. Wade, U. S. A., retired, who died Tuesday morning in Walter Reed Hospital following a several weeks' illness, will be held tomorrow at West Point, N. Y.

Colonel Wade, 70, had resided at 2704 Ontario Road Northwest for more than two years or since his departure from the Soldiers Home where, even though retired from active duty, he continued for four years to perform services assigned him when he first went there as an active officer.

The son of the late Maj. Gen. James F. Wade, Colonel Wade graduated from West Point in 1896 and saw service in the Philippines, in Panama and other foreign posts. During the last war he was assigned to the Adjutant General's office here. While residing in Washington, he was prominently identified with the Caribou Society.

He is survived by one son, J. B. Wade, Jr., of Arlington Village; a brother, Maj. Ben F. Wade, College Park, Md., and one sister, Mrs. Charles Crosby of Ashtabula, Ohio.

Mrs. Nellie B. Ross Funeral Services Here Tomorrow

Services for Mrs. Nellie B. Ross, 64, who died suddenly Tuesday as she completed her work as an election official at Somerset School, Bethesda, Md., will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. at the Ernest C. Lee Funeral Home, Fourth Street and Massachusetts Avenue Northeast.

Mrs. Ross, active in Republican circles in Friendship Heights and an election official for many years, lived at 5612 Wisconsin Avenue, Bethesda. She was a member of the Women's Republican Club of Montgomery County, secretary of the Citizens Committee of Friendship Heights, and a member of the board of the Methodist Church. Born in Hamilton, Canada, she had been a resident of Bethesda for many years.

She is survived by her husband, Sullivan J. Ross, son, James Ross, and three daughters, Mrs. J. B. Baines, of Washington; Charles B. Baines, Elizabeth N. J., and William F. Baines, Hamilton, Canada.

Lieut. Beall's Rites Today At Fort Myer

Funeral services for Lieut. Kenneth Sutter Beall, 39, U. S. Navy, Wilmette, Ill., who was killed in an airplane crash at Fort Meade, Va., last Friday, will be held in the Fort Myer Chapel today. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemetery with full military honors, the Navy announced.

Lieutenant Beall was commissioned in the Naval Reserve last June. He had been on duty at the Naval Station at Quantico Point, N. C., before being transferred to the Naval Air Station at Norfolk, Va.

Randolph Trails As County Turns To G. O. P. Control

Special Dispatch to The Post
Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 4.—An abrupt swing from Democratic control of this county for the past two years to election of Republicans was registered in the biennial voting here yesterday.

For Congressmen from this district, Congressman Jennings Randolph, Democrat, trailed Judge C. H. Baker of Morgantown, Republican, 3531 to 3332.

Gov. M. M. Neely, seeking election to the United States Senate, lost the county to his Republican opponent, Chapman Revercomb of Charleston, 1556 to 855. Hugh H. Shott, of Bluefield, running for the short term United States senatorial seat, also trailed his Democratic opponent, Senator Joseph Royster, 3489 to 3016.

Montgomery Now Faces Job Of Drafting County Charter

By J. Glenn Beall for the Sixth Maryland District Congressional seat. They said that an analysis of the balloting showed a definite correlation between the voting on the charter and the Congressional election. They added the belief that the fight over the charter had impelled many organization Democrats to vote against the machine who otherwise would have voted a straight party ticket.

Opponents of the charter indicated yesterday a possibility that they may go to the Maryland Court of Appeals for a settlement of their contention that it will be impossible to draft an effective charter because of the constitutional requirement limiting the function of the County Council to one month in each year.

In a statement, J. Bond Smith, attorney for the Maryland Park and Planning Commission, who spark-plugged the organization opposition to the charter, declared "more than 1200 fewer voters actually voted for this experiment than signed the charter petition. The reaction against charter is thus indicated in the returns. We await with confidence the ultimate verdict, two years hence, within which time it may be possible to obtain a judicial determination of the question by the Court of Appeals of Maryland."

D. C. Gas Firm's Net Declines To $734,777

The Washington Gas Light Company yesterday reported net income of $734,777 in the first nine months of this year, as compared with $939,335 in the same 1941 period. The reduction was attributed to increased operating expenses and taxes.

Operating revenues for the period were $7,909,324, against $7,072,432 in the first nine months of 1941 or an increase of $836,892. Operating expenses, including depreciation and taxes, were $821,301 larger.

A seasonal loss of $38,861 for September was reflected against a deficit of $7,547 for the corresponding 1941 month. Operating revenues for the month showed a gain of $86,065.

The report also showed a gain of approximately 14 per cent in the volume of gas sales for the month, the sales being 896,975 M (thousand) cubic feet this year, compared with 783,994 M cubic feet for September, 1941. Meters in service in the District of Columbia increased 9,279 over last year, to a total of 182,950. Gross additions to the company's property in Washington amounted to approximately $201,000 in September and $2,688,000 in the first nine months of this year.

Tax Data Distributed

With the new income tax form-most in the minds of the public as the result of the 1942 tax legislation, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane have gone "all out" on the subject with a 1942 edition of the "Investors Tax Kit," which is being distributed to their customers and friends in Washington.

The tax kit includes a pamphlet survey of the 1942 tax law as it applies to investors of all income, prepared by the Research Institute of America. The kit also includes the firm's regular monthly letter, which points out significant changes in the law, and three work sheets intended to simplify the task of computing capital gains and losses.

Claims Total $2,276,000

Insurance death claims paid in Washington during the first nine months of this year aggregated $7,778,000 on 9251 policies, according to a compilation of the Institute of Life Insurance.

Total for the Nation was $740,841,000 on 824,583 policies.

Nat Distillers Sells Minority Interest

New York, Nov. 4 (AP)—Sale of National Distillers Products Corp. by its minority interest in Standard Alcohol Co. to Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey), which held 65 per cent of the stock, was announced today.

Standard Oil said purchase of the balance of the stock of Standard Alcohol was to integrate its business of making industrial alcohols and other refinery gas solvent products with the big oil company's other chemical operations. The sale price was not disclosed.

War Projects Boost Building To 10 1/2 Billion

New construction in the United States totaled $10,500,000,000 during the first nine months of 1942, compared with eight billion dollars in the same period last year, Secretary of Labor Perkins reported yesterday.

Construction totaled $7,700,000,000 in the first nine months of this year, almost twice the volume for the corresponding 1941 period. Construction work at military and naval depots, stations and airfields and the expansion of war plant facilities almost trebled the volume reported for these categories during the first nine months of 1941.

Material shortages resulted in a decrease of 34 per cent in the volume of private construction, the report said. During the first nine months this year private construction totaled $2,800,000,000, a decrease of $1,400,000,000.

Highway construction declined 34 per cent. War housing financed by the Federal Government increased 11 per cent.

Bache & Co. Given WLB Hearing on Employees' Strike

New York, Nov. 4 (AP)—J. S. Bache & Co., announced today that War Labor Board had agreed to a hearing on the brokerage firm's contention the WLB was without jurisdiction over an office employees' strike since the war effort was not involved.

William Walker, attorney for Bache & Co., said the board had set the hearing for 10 a.m. November 7, before a division of three members of the board at Washington.

Bache & Co. had asked a preliminary public hearing to determine whether the WLB had jurisdiction "over this strictly private controversy with a minority of our employees which in no way affects the war effort."

Company sources said about 90 of 127 employees who struck more than a month ago had applied for reemployment and were being taken back.

The strike, called by the American Federation of Office Employees, AFL, on October 2, followed a wage and hour contract demand by the union.

Arms Industry Profit Margins Drop Sharply

New York, Nov. 4.—Armament-producing industries such as metal products, automotive and chemical manufacturers had sharply lower profit margins in 1941, compared with 1940, the National Industrial Conference Board said today.

Also declining were margins in the paper and allied products and the stone, clay and glass products industries.

The forest products, the petroleum and coal products industries and the nonmanufacturing corporations had higher margins of profit, however, the board reported. Earnings figures were after taxes—including Federal income taxes—the organization added.

Said the board:

"Last year United States factories handled about 30 billion more in dollar volume and 30 per cent more in physical volume than in 1940. Earnings on sales, after taxes, dropped to 5.4 per cent, from 6.1 per cent in 1940 and 5.6 per cent in 1939.

"Preliminary data suggest that this drop resulted primarily from sharply lowered margins in the metal automotive and chemical industries, all of which are now closely related to the production of armaments.

"In contrast, margins continued to rise or remained relatively unaltered in industries which were previously below the average rate of return."

Late Earnings Statements

American Water Works & Electric Co. and subsidiaries reported net income for the 12 months ended Sept. 30 was $2,940,892, equal after preferred dividend requirements to 74 cents a common share. For the preceding 12 months the company reported a net income of $3,829,741 or $1.16 a common share.

Standard Oil Co. of Ohio reported net profit of $3,413,359 for the first nine months, against $4,464,095 the same period of 1941, when tax provision was but $6,941,158 compared with $10,588,133 this year. Gross operating income in the nine months was $98,378,075, against $76,778,054 the same period of 1941.

Continental Oil Co. and subsidiaries for the nine months ended September 30 reported net profit of $2,249,606, or $1.97 a share, in the like 1941 period. Current earnings were after charges and deduction of $303,943 which represented pipe line earnings in excess of 7 per cent of Interstate Commerce Commission valuations restricted as to distribution and use.

Lily-Tulip Cup Corp. and subsidiaries for the 12 months ended September 30 reported net profit of $733,572 after provision for taxes but before deduction of $100,000 for future contingencies, or $3.87 a common share. This compared with $696,318, or $3.62 a share, in the previous 12 months.

Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. and subsidiary companies reported consolidated profit of $2,539,716 after all charges, including depreciation, depletion, interest and taxes, for the quarter ended September 30, 1942, compared with $3,942,157 in the like period of 1941. Consolidated profit for the nine months ended September 30, 1942, was $7,470,186, compared with $12,040,384 in the like period of 1941.

The Outlook

Business Births' Show Sharp Decline As U.S. Moves Into Streamlined War Economy

By James Marlow and George Zielke, Wide World Business Writers

The business population of the country is growing smaller, but it is moving daily into a streamlined wartime economy: business "births" have been fewer but so have business "deaths."

It is because those business "births" are fewer that there is a decline in the business population of the country.

Business "births" may be described as brand-new enterprises or those existing ones which change their names, business "deaths" are those which change their legal form or ownership or disappear entirely.

Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., points out that the decline in "births" started sharply in June of 1940 when the Selective Service Act was proposed. That was the time when this country began to gird for war.

Actually, the Senate's special committee on small business noted, the general trend of business births had been downward since 1920.

That committee earlier this year made a forecast—almost on the nose—that in 1942 it was possible "births" of all types of concerns would range between 10 and 12 per cent of the total concerns in population, or between 215,000 and 280,000 new enterprises.

The committee has estimated that more than 1000 new concerns open their doors each business day and that about an equal number close. When the number of new enterprises opening their doors daily falls below that of the enterprises closing down, then the general business population declines.

Figures which Dun & Bradstreet will release November 15 in its Dun's New York show that business "births" so far this year totaled 245,000, compared with 338,100 in 1941, while business "deaths" so far in 1942 were 312,500, compared with 330,600 in the same period of 1941.

Thus, there were 93,000 fewer "births" this year than last but at the same time the number of "deaths" was 18,100 fewer.

But that there is a decline in the business population is shown by the Dun & Bradstreet reference books, which note that now the total number of businesses—manufacturing, wholesale and retail—is about 2,124,000, compared with 2,194,100 in November-December, 1941.

These are some of the reasons offered on why people are not rushing forth to open new enterprises:

Material shortages, manpower shortages, Government restrictions on use and sale of vital materials, the prospect that many would-be new businessmen would be called into military service, and the general uncertainties of war.

Some lines—automobiles, automobile accessories, gas household appliances—would hardly be fertile fields down by that much the chance for fresh enterprises.

The greatest average mortality rate is always in the retail field and Walter Mitchell, Jr., research director for Dun & Bradstreet, says every retail group currently is showing a net loss in population.

But so far in this country there has been no direct limitation on the opening of new business or the extension of trade lines (such as a filling station operator selling shirts and socks) if a would-be business man can find a way of doing it.

This is in contrast with what has happened in Canada and Great Britain.

The Canadian wartime prices and trade board this week froze a variety of business establishments at their present status and forbade starting of new businesses except by permit.

The creation of new Canadian selling outlets, stocking of lines of goods not already handled and moving to larger premises was also prohibited except by permit. The order applied to manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers and 10 types of service businesses.

In England the clamp was applied much expanded on new enterprises or expanded selling lines. The United States Department of Commerce has noted that the British board of trade prohibited opening of nonfood stores after January 1, 1942, or the addition of new lines except under license.

New 'C' Gas Stickers to Tell Public 'Why'

By the Associated Press
The new "C" gasoline ration sticker will tell the public just why the motorist received it—whether he gets more than 470 miles of occupational driving a month for being a doctor, nurse, farm worker, essential war worker, etc.

To List Purposes
Purposes for which "C" rations are permitted will be listed on each sticker and local ration boards will place a check mark beside the purpose for which each sticker was granted. Motorists, in turn, must display a sticker for the most liberal style of ration book allowed them.

Eastern motorists already having "C" stickers which do not show the reason why they were given will not have to get new ones at this time.

Who May Obtain Them

The Office of Price Administration said purposes for which "C" cards may be issued include:

Official Government or Red Cross business; school official traveling from school to school; transportation of four or more persons to school; transportation of United States mail; wholesale newspaper delivery; carrying newsreel photographic equipment; physicians, surgeons or veterinarians; public health nurses or internes; embalmer; minister, priest or rabbi; transportation of farm workers, marine workers, or farm materials; essential hospital, utility or war worker; labor conciliation; recruiting and training of workers; construction, repair and maintenance services or production specialists; members of Armed Forces to duty; telegraph delivery; essential scrap agents.

Navy Music School Groups to Present Concert Tomorrow

The United States Navy School of Music band and chorus will present their fall concert tomorrow at 8:15 p. m. in Constitution Hall, demonstrating ability that probably will be appreciated a few months hence on a battleship, with the waves for background.

Selections from Bach to Jerome Kern will be given by the 90-piece band and the 100-voice chorus, under the direction of Ensign James M. Thurmond. No tickets are necessary for admission.

William E. Arsen, who formerly played first horn with the St. Paul Civic Opera Orchestra, as soloist, will play "Concerto for Horn," by Strauss.

The boys, who receive at least a year of training at the school, will be sent to the ships of the Navy in units of 20. Music will be combined with sailing. The school will graduate 80 men November 24. Capacity of the school, founded in 1935, is about 350.

Show Girls at Court Hearing

Jury Adjudges Kadens Insane

By the Associated Press
Chicago, Nov. 4.—Irwin Kadens, described by the Federal Bureau of Investigation as a "three-State crime wave," was adjudged insane today and was ordered by Judge John A. Sbarbaro to be committed to an institution for the insane.

The insanity verdict was returned by a jury of six men and six women a few hours after two court-appointed psychiatrists had reported that Kadens was mentally deranged and unable to distinguish between right and wrong.

port was made after Kadens had been called for trial on a charge of robbery of a loan company.

Following the verdict three charges of robbery and one of rape pending against Kadens were set aside with leave to reinstate. When the jury read its verdict—after only five minutes of deliberation—Kadens rose and cried out: "I protest. I want to be tried on a death penalty offense and I want to be my own lawyer."

Yule Lighting Caution Urged

With the appearance on downtown streets of Christmas decorations, Defense Coordinator John Russell Young last night urged citizens to use discretion in outdoor lighting for Christmas in order not to create blackout hazards.

No mandatory orders were issued, nor was wholesale abandonment of the traditional decorations asked. But "unnecessary and potentially dangerous types of lighting of streets," as warned against by the national OCD, were discouraged because of critical materials, consumption of electric power and fire hazards.

"It is not intended by such restrictions that individual stores or homes may not decorate their windows as in previous years, provided that such lighting conforms to applicable dimout regulations," Young said. "Such lights should not be on except when occupants of the premises are available to put them out promptly upon an air raid alarm."

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Klutz
Bureaucracy Curb Seen
As Election Aftermath.

Tuesday's election results that swept many Democratic members of Congress out of office will be felt in the Federal agencies here. It's generally believed that there'll be a gradual shaking down and tightening up in Government offices. A few big officials may lose their jobs. The "small fry" have no cause for alarm. The election may have the effect of stopping the vast expansion of Federal agencies. It can't be disputed that the number of Federal employees and the general confusion surrounding their activities here has become a political issue.

It's reported that a top Democratic politico warned party insiders several weeks ago that conditions in Washington would cost the Democrats tens of thousands of votes, perhaps as many as half a million. This politico pointed out that thousands of Federal workers had quit Washington disappointed, disillusioned and confused, and he surmised that these people would influence the votes of their families and friends. Some of those departing underworked and others were overworked. They quit for both reasons.

It's the historical role of a political organization to build up a larger bureaucracy but it's reported that officials of the Democratic National Committee some weeks ago urged a halt, or at least a slowing down, of the Government hiring program. It's probably the first time in history that a professional political organization of the party in power took that step. The Washington government was fast becoming a political issue and the politicians were the first to recognize it.

The House several weeks ago voted an investigation of Federal personnel practices but Chairman Ramspeck, who'll conduct the inquiry, delayed the investigation until after the election. Now that the election is over, Ramspeck can be expected to move into the agencies and force reforms. The election will give the committee an added incentive. Housing, salaries, transportation, cafeteria and other everyday problems of the Federal workers will be gone into by the committee in addition to personnel practices. The Government owes it to the employees to make them better satisfied.

GAO Unit to Asheville

General Accounting Office will move its postal accounts division to Asheville, N. C. for the duration. The division has 800 employees and the move will be made around January 1. The transfer was previously predicted in this column. Comptroller General Lindsey Wilson said he had been "strongly urged" by the Budget Bureau to move the division and that he agreed. "In the spirit of co-operation," the unit is located in the old Postoffice Building. The vacated space will be taken over by GAO's audit division.

Postoffice Department agreed to the move. A check shows that roughly 60 per cent of the employees will make the transfer. Some of the jobs won't be filled. Employees who prefer to remain here will be placed in other GAO jobs. The division will be brought back here when the new GAO building is completed and that's expected to be after the war. GAO has the money for the building but WPA stopped its construction to save vital war materials.

Gus Peck, formerly with Wage and Hour, is advising Don Nelson on labor problems. . . . British Production Chief Lythlton is returning here for conferences with Nelson. . . . Democratic National Committee has told its employees to look for jobs elsewhere. Its staff will be cut 65 per cent and it'll give up most of its offices at the Mayflower. . . . War Department canceled promised promotions for its Allowance and Allowment employees who aren't going to Newark. . . . War Housing Center has taken over half of the counter in the main hall at "Mallett's Madhouse." It'll answer housing inquiries from there.

Big Catch—No Sale

Ketchikan, Alaska—Roy McDougall thought he must have the bottom of Ketchikan Harbor on his hook. He was fishing for small cod, but pulled in a 405-pound halibut. McDougall may grow mighty tired of fish. It's closed season on halibut, and he either will have to give it away or eat it himself. In season, the market price would have been $50.

Randolph Is Reelected To Congress

District Committee Members Lose in Connecticut, Ohio
G. O. P. Landslides

Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), chairman of the House District Committee, has apparently been reelected by West Virginia's Second Congressional District after a seesaw battle which was at issue down to the last few hundred ballots.

Two other Democratic members of the committee went down in defeat as the Nation-wide Republican avalanche raided the Ninth Ohio District and the at-large representation in Connecticut to unseat John F. Hunter, Ohio, and Lucien J. Maciora, Connecticut, respectively.

The only other member of the committee who was threatened with defeat was John E. Sheridan of Pennsylvania. He upset Republican forecasts, however, by retaining his Philadelphia seat for the Democrats after a bitter contest. The balloting will leave eight vacancies on the committee in the Seventy-eighth Congress—created by the two defeats, two prior resignations and four noncandidates. All Republican members who sought reelection were returned.

In West Virginia latest returns gave Randolph 32,929 votes to 32,622 for his Republican opponent, Judge Charles D. Baker of Morgantown—a winning margin of 307 ballots.

Last reports said that Baker had not yet conceded the victory and there was still a possibility that a recount would be asked.

Randolph's 307 margin included all but one of the district's 471 precincts. That still outstanding is in Jefferson County, normally Democratic.

Despite his narrowly won triumph, Randolph phoned his family here that he had run 12,000 votes ahead of the Democratic ticket in his district as the Republican's picked up the State's contested Senate seat.

Hard fights had been forecast for both of the losing committee members, and both were apparent victims of widespread G. O. P. trends in their respective States. Hunter was beaten by Homer A. Ramsey in Toledo, Ohio, while former Congressman R. J. Monahan defeated Maciora for Congress's Representative at Large.

With control of the House so delicately in balance, it was doubtful whether Randolph would be able to carry through his plans to step down as Washington's "mayor" in January to take over the chairmanship of the House Roads Committee.

D'Alessandro in Line
Should he do so, however, his undoubted successor to the leadership of the District group will be Thomas J. D'Alessandro (Democrat) of Maryland, who coasted to an easy 3-1 victory over his Republican opponent in Baltimore.

Other majority members are from the South and were unopposed. The only members of the Senate District Committee who were up for reelection—Capper (Republican), of Kansas, and Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire—have been elected. Senator Hughes (Democrat), of Delaware, was not a candidate, and his seat will be one only vacancy there.

The Civil Service Commission's two members, of next importance to many Washingtonians, also appear slated for some changes as a result of Tuesday's balloting. Representative Robert Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, House chairman, was returned without opposition, but two members were defeated while the fate of three others is in question.

LeRoy Downs (Democrat) of Connecticut was ousted by Democrat Clare Boothe Luce, while Bernard J. Gehrman, Wisconsin Progressive, was beaten by Alvin E. O'Connell, Republican.

The plot and half pint sizes were previously exempt from price control although larger sizes have been covered by the general maximum price regulation. Arlington and Alexandria as well as the District are affected.

No Retail Increase

The new ceiling prices were established at present price levels and should not require an increase in the retail price of milk, either in restaurants or food stores, an OPA spokesman said. Prices are about 1 cent a pint above last March levels.

D. C. Zoo Collects 68 Tons Of Salvage for Scrap Drive

RIFLES PUT ON SCRAP PILE—This collection of 18 Italian-made rifles, displayed by Jane Perkins, secretary, was turned over to the District scrap metal drive yesterday by the National Rifle Association. They are Vetterli and Vitalli models of 1871-1887 from the Tiro A Sento of New York, Inc., an exclusive Italian-American shooting society established in 1888. The guns adorned the club house walls.

The Washington Zoo joined the ranks of big District scrap contributors yesterday as the District Salvage Committee pressed its search for metals of all kinds, particularly iron.

The zoo's collection of 68 tons of salvageable metal, 800 pounds of which is precious copper and brass, includes parts of old machinery, iron and steel fence posts, guard rails and a dismantled sawmill.

Also last night fourteen tons of scrap metal on the lot adjoining the Elks Building, 919 H Street Northwest, testified to the effectiveness of the Elks' scrap salvage drive as attendees of a rally within heard the club praised for its efforts in the special drive which ended yesterday.

James E. Colliflower, chairman of the District of Columbia Salvage Committee, and Horace Walker, executive secretary, were hearty in their praises of the Elks' efforts to get out the scrap in the month-long drive which ended on Elks Club Scrap Salvage Day yesterday. Walker also spoke on the unusual items contributed by patriotic residents.

The guests were introduced by Exalted Ruler Ambrose Durkin and James T. Edwards, chairman of the Elks scrap committee, told how the club drive had been organized. Several selections were played by the Elks Boys Band.

Meanwhile Horace Walker, executive secretary of the District Salvage Committee, conferred with Christian Feinrich, chairman of the Bottling Industries Committee, to effect a plan for collection of tin can scrap.

Walker announced that old appliances are continuing to swell the District scrap pile. The U. S. Marshall's office informed committee headquarters that a truck and a touring car were available at 925 Twelfth Street Northwest. Mrs. F. H. Knox, 1710 Eye Street Northeast, contributed a 1934 Terraplane, while Thompson's Dairy donated an International truck. Other contributors of worn out automobiles include:

OPA Sets Milk, Cream Ceiling On Packages for Restaurants

The Office of Price Administration moved to protect customers of Washington area restaurants from a possible increase in the price of milk yesterday by announcing specific wholesale ceiling prices for fluid milk and cream sold in pint and half pint bottles and paper containers.

The pint and half pint sizes were previously exempt from price control although larger sizes have been covered by the general maximum price regulation. Arlington and Alexandria as well as the District are affected.

No Retail Increase
The new ceiling prices were established at present price levels and should not require an increase in the retail price of milk, either in restaurants or food stores, an OPA spokesman said. Prices are about 1 cent a pint above last March levels.

Cornelius Branch, about 60, Negro, of 2403 I Street Northwest, died at 12:58 a. m. today in Emergency Hospital an hour after he had been hit by a streetcar at Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, last night.

Police records revealed the streetcar was operated by Charles B. Howry, 25, of Route 2, Fairfax, Va., and that he had 18 months' experience operating a streetcar. Police said it was indicated from the manner in which the accident occurred that the victim had been running from the south platform across the tracks to catch a west bound car when he was struck. The accident occurred about 51 feet from the east end of the platform.

October Accident Rate Declines

Traffic accidents in Washington showed a sharp decline in October as compared with the same month last year, it was announced yesterday by Traffic Director William A. Van Duser.

Nine persons were killed last month as compared with 13 for October a year ago. Although 70 persons were injured in two bus accidents on two consecutive days, the total number of injuries last month dropped to 512 from 607 for the same period in 1941. Of the total number injured last month, 145 were pedestrians as against 170 for October 1941. Seven of the nine deaths last month were in the pedestrian classification. Accidents of all types totaled 828 last month as compared with 1406 for October a year ago.

Changes in Parking Regulations Ordered

Changes in the parking regulations on four principal District streets were ordered by the Commissioners last night to go into effect when the official signs are posted. The changes were approved by the Traffic Advisory Council before submission to the board.

Parking is banned at all times on Yuma Street from Tenley Circle to Thirty-third Street, which follows the route of the H-3 cross-town bus line. At Thirtieth and D Streets Northeast parking is to be banned at all hours.

Lunches In Schools To Continue

Oral Hearings Ended on Mooted Alcohol-Narcotics High School Course

The WPA lunch program for children in elementary schools here will not be discontinued as feared, it was announced yesterday by Assistant Superintendent Robert L. Haycock.

Haycock said there will be enough WPA workers available and any shortages in help will be filled by volunteers from the various parent groups.

Meanwhile the Board of Education ruled that no further oral hearings would be held on revisions to the alcohol-narcotics section of the senior high school health course.

Those interested in the alcohol and narcotics instruction, the board said, will have to submit their opinions to the board in writing. Final action will be taken by the board at the next meeting, November 18, by which time the special committees named to study the course will have given the board its last reports.

Agriculture Course Approved

Unanimous board approval was given to a proposed program and outline course of study for vocational agriculture in the vocational schools, particularly the Phelps School. First notice of the instruction was presented to the board at a meeting early in the summer.

Completion of the course by the student will require three years. The Federal Government has agreed to let the Phelps School use 25 acres of an island in the eastern branch of the Anacostia River. While many of the items of equipment are in the heavy steel category, a school official told The Post, it is expected that either through WPA allocations or "ingenious borrowing and hiring," such equipment will be procured.

Such major recreation centers in the public schools as can be operated within existing appropriations and handled by school personnel will be kept open to the public during the Thanksgiving and Christmas vacation periods, the board decided.

Reports on the number of persons who avail themselves of these facilities during these periods will be given to the board to aid in formulating future policy. The board approved a $68,000 supplement to the 1943 budget requests to meet unanticipated expenses.

It also decided to ask the District Commissioners to expedite as much as possible the preparation of plans for temporary construction of the Merritt and Stanton Schools. One board member pointed out that some of the delay had been due to the fact that the District architect, Nathan Wyeth, had been swamped with plans for hospitals, among other things.

The Merritt School, to accommodate Negro children, will be erected at Forty-ninth and Hayes Streets Northeast. It will be a 26-room building of the bungalow type and will combine junior high and elementary classes.

The board was informed that enrollment in the high school cadet corps had declined somewhat this year as compared with last, but not to a significant extent. Total enrollment in all public schools here declined more than 3000 this year as compared with last year.

National Symphony Orchestra Gives Concert for War Fund

SOLOIST AND CONDUCTOR—Gladys Swarthout and Hans Kindler at last night's Victory concert.

Hans Kindler and National Symphony Orchestra donate their services in a "Victory Concert" for the Community War Fund on Wednesday night in Constitution Hall. Soloist: Gladys Swarthout. Program: Symphony No. 4 in E minor (Brahms), "Concours le pays" from "Mignon" (Thomas), "Time," suite for voice and orchestra (Clarence Olmstead), "Cavalry of the Steppes" and "My Moscow" (Knipper-Kindler), "American Patrol" (Meacham-Isturbi).

By Ray C. B. Brown
Constitution Hall was not as crammed as it could have been last evening when the National Symphony Orchestra played a special pre-season concert for the benefit of the Community War Fund.

Nevertheless the audience was large and enthusiastic. The temperature of applause was an increasing one, remaining moderate for the fourth symphony of Brahms, rising rapidly for the solo appearances of Gladys Swarthout, and reaching a hectic peak over Jose Iturbi's arrangement of Meacham's familiar "American Patrol."

During the Brahms symphony, of which Hans Kindler gave a deeply felt and eloquent reading, one had occasion to note the number of new players in the orchestra replacing men called to the armed services. It was evident that the organization has not yet adjusted itself completely to the loss of 30 men whose successors are in the process of adaptation to a new environment. It may take a little time for the ensemble to regain its characteristic tone quality and its flexible response to the director, but a good step has already been taken in that direction.

Gladys Swarthout was in excellent voice, singing with warmth and dramatic effectiveness the aria, "Concours le pays" from "Mignon." One is grateful to her for introducing here the interest-

Trials of a Heavyweight

Bloomington, Ill.—George W. Ziller has petitioned Circuit Judge William C. Radloff to hold his trial in an elevator-equipped courthouse. In his petition, Ziller's attorney said the courthouse at Monticello had no elevators and climbing three flights of stairs to the courtroom constitutes a physical hardship to a man of Ziller's weight—538 pounds.

Zone Laws Evict 20 D. C. Families

Order Against Multiple Dwellings Causes Hardships In Overcrowded City

Twenty families in crowded Washington have been forced to vacate their apartment houses within the last few weeks as the result of enforcement of District zoning laws, it was learned by The Post yesterday.

The latest instance is that of the three families occupying the three upper stories of the house at 2200 Thirty-second Place Southeast, which is owned by John R. Pruitt. Maj. J. C. Dorbandt, with the Judge Advocate General's office, is one of the tenants affected. He said yesterday that Pruitt had been ordered to remove cook stoves and kitchen sinks from each of the three apartments, which would make them untenable for families. Pruitt was given 30 days to convert his house into a single-family unit.

"Pruitt lives in the basement apartment with his family," Major Dorbandt said. "I am one of the three tenants occupying the three upper stories."

House Is New
"The house is new, having been built in the spring. I rented my apartment before the house was completed and moved in as soon as possible."

"The order to Pruitt to convert the house to a one-family unit by removing the sink and cook stove naturally will mean that we will have to try to find some other place to go."

The officer said he was at loss to know where he could find a home. He made a protest with District zoning officials, but in view of the law which forbids the construction of any but one-family houses or churches in "A" restricted zones, there was nothing they could do.

The only recourse is to turn the dwelling into a rooming house without housekeeping facilities, which would be authorized by the Board of Zoning Adjustment.

Falls to Find Haven
Mrs. Dorbandt said last night she had so far failed to find a place to which she, her husband and their 14-year-old son could move.

A similar situation faced Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Ropes, in the apartment above them, she said. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Cullin, in the apartment below, are better situated in that they have purchased a home and expect to move.

Mrs. Dorbandt said there were other houses in the neighborhood which also had been converted into multiple family units.

Robert H. Davis, District Building inspector, said his office had been forced to issue similar orders on a total of 56 houses here, affecting 20 families.

"We do not go out looking for these violations," he said. "We are fully cognizant of the acute housing shortage here and the present emergency. I may add that we dislike doing it very much."

"We act only when we receive written complaint that the zoning law is being violated. And then there is nothing left for us to do but make an inspection and enforce the law."

Lieut. Ringness, D.C. Navy Man, Killed in Action

Lieut. Henry Raymond Ringness, Medical Corps, U. S. N., of 4881 Colorado Avenue Northwest, was fatally wounded when an airplane in which he was making a flight over Guadalcanal was attacked by a Japanese plane on October 17. He died later in a hospital on Guadalcanal Island, the Navy announced last night.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Lieut. Ringness Margaret Sutton Ringness, and a sister, Mrs. Florence Clements, both of whom reside at 4881 Colorado Avenue Northwest. Mrs. Ringness is the daughter of Rear Admiral Dallas Grady Sutton, medical officer in charge of the Norfolk Naval Hospital.

Lieutenant Ringness was born August 17, 1912 at Morris, Minn., and received his medical education at the George Washington University Medical School where he graduated in 1930. He was a member of the Alpha Kappa Kappa medical fraternity. He served his internship at the South Pacific General Hospital, San Francisco, Calif., after which he became resident physician in pathology at Doctors Hospital, this city.

Dr. Ringness was appointed a lieutenant, junior grade, in the Medical Corps of the Navy on July 7, 1942, and on August 8, reported at the Navy Medical School here for instruction. He later completed a course of instruction at the Naval Air Station, Pensacola, Fla., and was designated, flight surgeon. He was ordered to duty with the Fleet Marine Corps, on March 11, 1942.

Man Pinned Under Front of Street Car

RESCUE SQUAD WORKS TO FREE HIM—Cornelius Branch, about 60, of 2403 I Street Northwest, is shown pinned under the front of a street car last night at Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest. His feet still rest on the loading platform and rescue squad members work to remove him. He was seriously injured and was pronounced dead an hour after his removal to Emergency Hospital.

The Gentler Sex

By Melvina Lindsay

At the Wailing Wall

I.
If only we might have an end of griping.
By civilians safe at home who of small woes are always piping,
Or if only we could have a nice, big sound-proof wailing wall,
To which certain peevish ladies might go and bawl . . . and bawl . . .

II.
The one who in the morning "simply can't get out of bed,"
Without her cup of coffee—and who "might as well be dead,"
As do without it at her meals—and what is more, she knows
That "they" have plenty of it hid around, or by the politicians froze.

III.
The one who whines, "Why you can't get service any more!"
And besides all that, it makes her "good and sore"
The way the maids are acting, and how she has to scrub "with her own hands"
The bathroom floor because of labor's unbelievable demands!

IV.
The one who wails because she can't get roast or steak,
And has to take "old veal or lamb," or even worse, must make
A kidney stew, when neither hubby nor herself, nor any of their kin,
Were the kind who could accept such food without very great chagrin.

V.
The one who at the ladies' luncheon works herself into a fret
Because Irish linens are no more and Nylon hose impossible to get,
And copper teapots wholly lacking at the antique shop,
And her hoarded girdles wearing out and no hopes of a rubber crop.

VI.
The one who doesn't see how Christmas shopping ever can be done,
Or how she'll find the proper gifts she owes to every one,
When even now "The way they treat you at the stores,"
Is something that should send you talking irate through the doors.

VII.
The one who prates of hardships that she meets for lack of gas,
And who is pushed around on street cars by those of common class,
Who can never find a taxi, and must often "walk for blocks,"
And go on buses to receptions in a way most heterodox.

VIII.
The one who's certain she can never face the winter's cold,
With the houses down to 65, and the virgin wool all sold,
And whose Christmas will be ruined if she can't get on a train,
And if from turkey at Thanksgiving this one time she must abstain.

IX.
The ones who of their petty inconveniences continually spout,
And never think what the men of Guadalcanal are having to do without.
Who never stop to ponder on how safe their homes and lives,
While people elsewhere fear the bombs—and gas!—of winter's drives.

X.
The ones who moan of taxes and their lack of clothes and things,
While mothers and wives of fighting men apprehend what each day brings,
The ones who never seem to have learned what the sacrifice is for,
Who after nearly 11 months, do not know this is war!

In the Evening, by the Firelight

By Jeanne Contin

The Post Fashion Editor

After a day of unwinding red tape, ducking in and out of filing cabinets, and beating noisily on a typewriter, you owe yourself a good hunk of relaxation when you get home. Regardless of whether you plan to go out later in the evening, you should give yourself at least an hour of just sitting around. And a few nights a week of just reading or mending, or talking to your roommate will do you more good than you realize. The picture of relaxation is not necessarily a limp Raggedy Ann with a blank mind, although a few minutes of lying on the floor with your head down and feet up helps to un-kink tense muscles. A great part of relaxation is change . . . of what's been on your mind and your back all day, and general tempo.

For some reason, when you shed your office clothes the accumulated nervousness of business seems to go with them. We suggest a hot bath, providing there's not such a line down the hall that you'll miss dinner. If you expect to spend the rest of the evening at home, put on something comfortable that doesn't require elaborate underpinnings. Be sure, however, it's something you can look at in the mirror without wincing. Old kimonoes are bad for the morale. This does not mean that you have to be done-up . . . not at all, but there are lots of nice-looking lounge clothes that require no effort whatsoever.

Slacks are excellent, as they cover your legs and are adaptable to any position into which you're likely to drape yourself. Flannels keep their shape and are warm. They can also be worn outdoors. Lightweight corduroy is also good. Velvet looks pretty but is a dust catcher. Jersey is wonderfully comfortable, but a cheap quality will bag in the seat. Tweeds are a bit heavy for housewearing. A sweater, shirt (preferably wool or flannel), or a plain round necked blouse are all fine for the top. Stoles or scarves thrown around the shoulders look very smart, and can make the difference between health and a sniffle.

For the girl who doesn't care about trousers, a robe is the answer. The style doesn't make any difference, but it should be warm and the kind that doesn't cry for the cleaners after two wearings. You might like a brunch coat which is new this season, but we prefer the long ones because they're warmer and you don't have to worry about what you wear underneath. Flannel, wool, corduroy or suede cloth are all fine, and so are quilts.

Our model, leaning on the fireplace (lucky girl), wears a beautifully cut pair of navy blue wool flannel slacks . . . around $7. Her shirt is plaid flannel . . . about $1.50. The wool stole is . . . around $6.

Her roommate has a quilted rayon taffeta robe which we picked because it looks very attractive and is a lot for . . . around $6.

For more information about these clothes, call National 4200, extension 242, between 9:30 a. m. and 5 p. m.

Hand-y Helpers Smooth Them Up

If you can possibly manage it, Ginny Simms says, you should apply a touch of hand lotion to your hands after each working through the day. If your work is a task that takes you up to the elbows in grease and dirt, you can sometimes help the cause of soft hands along by applying one of the protective soaps or greases to your hands before plunging in.

Last, Ginny calls your attention to the fact that dirt and grease catch in any rough spot in the skin or nails. Neglect 'em and they get worse by the day. Go for 'em nightly—pumice is a great invention to cope with rough skin—smoothing everything down, scrubbing well with good soap, adding softening cream, and the worst of the dirt will give you the go-by, having no place to cling.

Which is okay by you.

Put back onto the fire and keep on fire just long enough (about two minutes) for the batter to set. Do not fry or let become crisp. Do not let crust form. It must be soft. Keeping Mentally Fit for War Emergencies

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Keeping fit under any circumstances involves three somewhat separate but interrelated activities: the mind, the nutrition and the muscles. It would be hard to say which is most important; this depends on just what you are expecting your body to do. If training for an athletic contest, muscular hygiene is primary. Starting out on any kind of stint of work, nutrition and good muscles and circulation contribute to the balance of the mind.

In such terrific emergencies as we are living through now, I am inclined to think mental hygiene takes first place.

I do not believe public officials, newspapers, magazines, radio announcers, feature and editorial writers always realize the effect of what they are saying and announcing on ordinary minds—and that includes the majority of us. Nor especially the effect on minds that are not quite stable.

Even the most vigorous and courageous and optimistic minds are staggered at times by what is going on around us. How must the impact of these events affect those who were never designed for great responsibility or intensive thinking.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

Adventure into the favorite dishes of other countries always pays good appetite dividends. Nowadays it may be a thrifty way also of putting a whole-some main dish before the family, that calls for little meat.

Enchiladas are a tempting food that have drifted across the border from Mexico, and are difficult to prepare. You can make enough filling for six servings from one pound ground raw veal. Ripe olives, meat and peppy flavoring go into the filling for this restful entree.

The following recipe for enchiladas comes from the test kitchen of the California Foods Research Institute, San Francisco, California.

Enchiladas

FILLING—Heat ¼ cup oil or fat in a large skillet. Add 1 pound ground raw veal and fry and stir about five minutes. Add 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 tablespoon chili powder, 1 small clove garlic, minced, 1 tablespoon paprika and blend. Add 2 cups water and bring to a boil, stirring continuously. Add 1 cup whole ripe olives and let cook slowly about 15 minutes.

Tortillas are delicious and are not the culinary mysteries they used to be. However, if they still seem mysterious to you follow this recipe and they will become an easy food to make.

TORTILLAS—Combine ¼ cup corn meal, 1¼ cups sifted all-purpose flour, ½ teaspoon salt and ½ cup water and mix. Roll into five very thin rounds. Fry in deep fat until edges are slightly brown. Place a tortilla in baking dish, cover with filling and sprinkle with some chopped onion and grated cheese. Top with second tortilla and repeat until all five are used. The top should be filling, cheese and onion. Cover and bake about 10 minutes in a moderate oven. Slice in wedges to serve.

Variety is one of the beauties of Chinese cookery. The Chinese have long been noted for their healthful dishes, and practically all of them are as economical as healthful for they consist principally of vegetables, combined with small pieces of meat. It is the seasonings that make them distinctive.

Egg rolls are one of the foods of the Chinese that have general appeal. When you first taste of their goodness you think they must be very difficult to prepare. I thought that until I was told by Chef Charley Young of the Chinese restaurant, Ruby Foo, just how to make them. The following is the recipe for making these delicious rolls:

Egg Rolls

First prepare the filling and then make the pastry covers. The recipe for the filling is:

FILLING—Combine equal portions of celery, bamboo shoots, pimiento, water chestnuts, and a portion equaling the same amount as the vegetables, of shrimp. Florida "green shrimp"

are preferred as they do not have the strong iodine flavor that some shrimp do. Add salt to taste, and a pinch of sugar. Add 1 teaspoon of chef seasoning powder or 1 cup of concentrated chicken broth. Chop the vegetables fine. Peel and clean the shrimp, then dice them. Mix all ingredients together and steam for 15 minutes, or until excess juice has simmered out. Squeeze into strainer to eliminate all of moisture.

Next prepare the covers according to the following recipe:

COVERS—Combine ½ cup pastry flour with ¼ cup water chestnut flour or use same amount of cornstarch and flower mixed. Add a pinch of salt and pinch of sugar, and ¼ teaspoon baking powder. Add 2 eggs. Beat until sufficient water to make a medium batter and mix thoroughly. Grease pan as you would for Egg rolls as pictured here, are one of the best liked Chinese foods. The goodness of tender vegetables and fresh shrimp, seasoned in the distinctive Chinese way, are enveloped in a thin pastry covering which has been fried to crispness in deep fat. These rolls will make the most avid meat-eater forget a shortage of meat.

School Day Romance Ripens Into Engagement After Lad Joins Army; but as Marriage Date Approaches, Girl Is Beseet by Tense Indecision

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 19 years of age and I am engaged to marry a boy, 22, who is now in the Army. We have been friends for more than five years. We dated all through high school, not steady, but quite often. I dated many other fellows during that time; but I was always very fond of him and we had the understanding that we would be married some time in the future. He joined the Army last spring, gave me an engagement ring in August and we set the wedding date for Christmas, which is drawing near. He has reason to believe he will be permanently stationed at his present base and he wants me to come there to be married. I am employed as a stenographer and would expect to go on working after marriage; making my home where he is and finding a job there. But as the time for marriage draws near, I feel more and more uncertain about what to do.

My parents object somewhat to the marriage at this time; but they want me to decide. They are quite fond of the boy, but my mother is afraid I wouldn't be satisfied to live on the small income we probably would have. Yet they say for me to do as I please, because I have to live my own life, that no one can live it for me; but that they only want my happiness. I am one of those girls who has had everything she needed or desired. The boy has had only two years of college and has no profession nor even an idea of what he might do when he leaves the Army. But he is a smart boy and I feel sure that he would be able to get a good enough job.

Realizes She Can't Stall Indefinitely

I realize that I am young to consider marriage, but I feel sure of my love for him. I have never known another boy whom I cared for in the least, except as a friend; and I feel that I can't put him off any longer. I intend either to go to him this Christmas and be married or tell him that I am not going to marry him. I have put him off for the last year, hoping conditions would become more favorable, but they haven't. Just a month ago, he sent me a railway ticket, insisting that I come then; but I sent the ticket back and told him I would come at Christmas. He was very much hurt and I can't disappoint him again. Since he has been in the Army, we have seen each other about once every two months; and I still care for him, even while he is away.

So what should I do? Should I go against my parents' wishes (not that they would be angry, you understand) and be married? Or should I keep my present residence and my very good job? If I go to him and get married, it means quitting my job; but I feel sure I wouldn't have any trouble getting another job there. And with both of our salaries, we could manage very nicely. Would you say that I am not too young to be married, if I am very sure of myself? I have faced the fact that he might be sent overseas before the war is over; and, also, I have recognized the possibility that he might not return; but I am sure I would never regret getting married. I wish I could give you more details of the situation, but it would take up too much space. I would like your opinion very soon, because I am anxious to hear what you think I should do. UNDECIDED.

Prospect of Marriage Has Little Appeal

DEAR UNDECIDED: My impression, indeed, my conviction, concerning the situation is this: You are doing your best to sell yourself a bill of goods in favor of getting married at Christmas; but, actually, the prospect has little, if any, downright appeal. In fact, I judge it to be about as attractive to you, as all things considered, as a dose of castor oil would have been, when you were 6 years old. The crux of your anxious indecision is this: You don't want to be married; not yet; not to this young man at this time, on the pinhead, devil-take-the-future terms that would necessarily obtain.

Frankly, you neither love him enough to welcome that prospect as high adventure; nor are you personally mature enough to face it with philosophic aplomb. However, you are fond of him, on the sentimental basis of a long-time sweethearting association. And because you have tacitly encouraged him for years in the conversationally embroidered fancy that marriage was in the cards, you can scarce muster courage to back down on that understanding, at this late date. And it is safe to say that if circumstances were such that you could marry him with all the peace-time furbelows—church wedding, social-set hullabaloo, nice little home all stocked and waiting, bridegroom with a good job giving promise of steady advancement, etc.—you would carry through with never a doubting thought as to the wisdom of the move.

From that background, you would regard it both as a lark and a sure thing—as a step forward into contented security that you had long casually contemplated. In that case, however, it would be not so much the man himself as the way-of-life he was making available to you, that exerted the most powerful appeal. And I think you must admit that it was with this picture of marriage to him in the back of your mind, that you lent encouragement to his matrimonial intentions these past years. But now, with that picture gone into the discard, taking along with it half your incentive to "love, honor and obey" him, and with the wedding date approaching at express-train speed, you find yourself out on the end of the well-known limb, not knowing which way to jump.

No Easy "Out" From Her Dilemma

You shrink from facing the unvarnished truth of your fundamental aversion to the makeshift marriage for various reasons. To mention a few:—(1) because, being fond of the boy, you don't want to hurt him; (2) because it would seem (and, indeed, would be) a cruel thing to dash his hopes at the eleventh hour, now, when he undoubtedly attaches more importance to your allegiance than ever before; and (3) because you can't quite bring yourself to run the risk of forfeiting his friendship altogether, after having fallen into a rut of dependence upon his singlehearted devotion.

In other words, then, it seems to you almost easier to go through with the marriage than to firmly reverse yourself, at this late date, and face up to the painful embarrassment and the readjustments, emotional and social, that would in all likelihood ensue. And because you wouldn't care to think you were taking the path of least resistance in holding to the vaguely distasteful course, you have been trying to convince yourself—and me,—that there is much to be said for it. Look back over your letter, and note the repetitive use of the term, "I feel sure . . ." But note also the pathetic conclusive contradiction of your signature, to-wit: "Undecided."

There is a philosophic maxim to the effect that it is sometimes necessary to be cruel in order to be kind. I think you have reached that paradoxical point in this romance. Marriage is a relationship too profoundly responsible, in its social implications; and a contract too exacting and irrevocable,—in the nature of its effect upon the individual personality,—to be reluctantly undertaken. And your dolorous reluctance to make this marriage, on the only terms possible,—a reluctance that shows through all your protestations to the contrary,—convinces me that you shouldn't go through with it; that you should, as the saying goes, "call it off," as much for the boy's sake as your own. Giving voice to that decision and acting accordingly will be painful and difficult, at first. But I venture to say that you will feel as if the burdens of the world had slipped from your shoulders, when you have finally got it into the boy's head that you really don't want, and emphatically don't intend, to marry him for a long time yet. If ever. And certainly not until you have reached the age (say, around 23) when you can face the responsibilities of wifehood with cordial assurance. M. H.

Mrs. Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Household Hints

Wipe furniture to be polished with a cloth dipped in vinegar and water first. It will polish easier, no finger marks will show.

French chalk dusted on will remove most grease spots from wallpaper. Leave it on for several hours, then brush it off with a soft clean cloth or small brush.

Use soap to clean the ivory keys of your piano—it stains and darkens the ivory. Use cloth moistened with denatured alcohol.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

It isn't always enough to know what medicines a child has to take; the big job is to get him to take them. The doctor comes in, studies the child, writes out a prescription and then it is up to the parent to see that the medicine goes down.

When the child is so sick as to need medicine, he is also too sick to be argued and fussed with when in his unreasonable-ness he refuses to take it.

Here are a few suggestions, culled from personal experience, which may prove helpful in such emergencies.

Many of the present-day sulfa drugs come in tablet form and young children find tablets difficult to swallow. They stick out top of their tongues. If the child can be shown how to put the tablet back of the tongue and drink water quickly, the tablet, if not too large, slips over the tongue easily.

If this doesn't work, the tablet may have to be mashed. Use a wooden potato masher or a wooden mallet for this and make the particles fine so they won't stick in the child's throat. They may be mixed with a combination of fruit and water, in small amounts. One teaspoonful of anything is easier to get down than a portion in a glass. Follow immediately with full strength fruit juice, to hasten the taste away.

These same fine crumbs may be mixed in a teaspoonful of tart jelly and given on a mouthful of bread or a crisp cracker. One young man got down three tablets of Brewer's yeast daily in this manner.

If the child likes soft cheese, it may be concealed in the cheese and then spread on cracker. It should be just one mouthful, no more, to be followed by water.

As the child gets old enough to handle spoons and bottle effectively he should throw his own medicine and take it himself. It is the being told that he "must"

do this and the distastefulness of having medicine held in front of him and being made to swallow it that minute which causes many a child to rebel.

A clock placed by the bed, indicating the time for medicine, and the bottle and clean spoon handy on a small tray, will encourage the child to feel grown-up when he measures his own dose and manfully downs it.

Our attitude when we take medicine is enormously influential to the child. We should make it known when we have to take pills or powders and give the child an excellent example of our stature in being able to swallow them, even though they do not taste pleasant.

Our leaflet, "Diet and Amusements for the Convalescent Child," may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Shop and Run— We Make a Hosiery Drive!

By Marianna

COLOR FOR FADED HOSE:

A treasure hunt is on in your boudoir. The lucky person finds a perfectly good pair of silk hose discarded in happier days when faded hose were doomed to an uneventful life in dresser drawer. But now is the time for all good women to gather up these deferred assets in the form of faded nylons, silk, or lisle and dye them to look like new.

You'll be glad to know there is a new and excellent hosiery dye on the market. It comes in three shades, suntan, sunbeige, and mauve taupe, and the color does not fade with washing. One box for 25 cents will dye six pairs—and you know it would cost 50 cents a pair if you had them done. If you have two odd stockings that don't match, dye them to make a pair!

MEND THEM YOURSELF!

If you've a bit of patience and dexterity with the needle, we recommend that you do your own repair work via a special hosiery needle. We were skeptical at first, we must admit but users say that it's really quite simple, you really can't tell they have been repaired, and it saves you money. Directions come with the needle.

SOME TIPS

Most repair counters are partial to silk and nylon, but we're glad to say we've found a repair counter that will cater to your cottons and rayons as well. Also another that will repair your silk mesh.

Experience has shown that it really takes four weeks (and quite often longer) to have your hose repaired. So don't waste your time making useless trips to the repair counter.

If you do have a run, don't try to sew it before you take it to the repair counter. It might be a stitch in time, but you'll probably have to take out nine before they'll repair it! The clerk will tell you whether they are worth repairing and whether or not you should sew part of it.

Please hold on to that receipt! Losing it may mean that it is impossible for you to claim your hosiery.

Please call National 4200 Extension 242 between 9:30 a. m. and 5 p. m. for further information.

Anyone With Allergy Should Try To Keep Baby From Getting It

By Ida Jean Kain

If you are allergic and you are going to have a baby, the time to do something about his allergy is now. You may be able to keep him from getting it. Certainly, it is worth while to try.

In a recent article in Hygeia Magazine, you are warned not to give in to a craving for any particular dish. Eating too much of a food may cause the child to develop a sensitivity to it. You should avoid an excessive intake of such foods as chocolate, nuts and eggs, which are the common trouble makers. Any expectant mother should be careful to get all the protective foods, but this is especially important when an allergy runs in the family.

And if you nurse the baby later, you will still have to be careful of your diet. You will have to stay away from any of the foods that have brought on digestive upsets, rashes or any other discomfort.

When you start giving the baby other foods like eggs try him out on a tiny bit of the yolk to see how he reacts. It may be all right in his diet. Then you can gradually increase the amount until he gets the whole egg yolk.

You are advised to watch out for dust in the nursery and to use cotton blankets and clothing for him, rather than woolen or silk. The floor covering should be hard surfaced and easily washed. He doesn't use a pillow so you won't have to bother about that. But when he gets older, have him sleep on a cotton or kapok pillow, rather than one filled with feathers. A feather filled pillow should be covered with some nonallergic cloth.

Even his pets must be selected with care. Some cases of chronic bronchitis and asthma show marked reactions to dog and cat hair. (So, no horsehair mattress.) Copyright, 1942, King Features, Inc.

Glamour Spies of World War II

Kalman de Littke of Counter-Espionage

By Secret Agent X

The ace counter-espionage of Poland, just before World War II, was a beautiful blonde, Kalman de Littke of Warsaw, daughter of the Field Marshal of Poland. One of her assignments was via fast plane to Vienna to check on a spy of the Russian OGPU, but as soon as she reached there she was thrown into a cell where she received a call from the statuesque Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, ex-vice Chancellor of Austria. Presenting Austria's apologies, he liberated her and stating that her prey had escaped Vienna asked her to help him to check on one Capt. Gabriel Rutkay of the Hungarian General Staff suspected of selling military secrets to the highest bidder. With the permission of her chief, she hurried to Budapest. To place the seductive Kalman into the arms of Rutkay the Budapest Military Intelligence prompted a grand ball.

They fell in love at first sight and Gabriel carried her off to his apartment where she remained for several days and nights. But in the middle of each night, while Gabriel slept heavily from the wine he had drunk, Kalman ransacked his rooms. Finding a hidden door, she managed to unlock it with a skeleton key and found behind it a complete photographic laboratory. With a flashlight, she found negatives of War Office documents and plans, including those of a newly-invented machine gun, the pride of the Hungarian ordnance department.

Then came the sickening morning when she kissed her lover goodbye and hurried to the window to get her last look at him as he went gallily out onto the pavement. Kalman was packing to leave the apartment when Gabriel burst in upon her and fired two shots at her. But his hand was trembling so with nervousness that it missed its mark. Then he threw the gun at her, missing her again, and rushing for her he tripped, falling heavily to the floor, where he still lay when she fled from the apartment, taking his pistol with her, but leaving a small automatic of her own. Escaping to the Intelligence Division she learned that Gabriel had just been discovered dead, shot by a bullet from a woman's automatic found in the room.

The Budapest Civil Police who were rushed to his apartment in ignorance of Gabriel's treason, probed the bullet from his fatal wound and finding that it was identical with those found in Kalman's little pistol but much smaller than two other bullets dug from the wall, persisted in their deduction that after firing twice in his own defense the captain of the guard had been fatally shot by his mistress.

So Kalman de Littke was arrested and Gabriel's family was sufficiently powerful to bring her to trial, claiming it was she who had stolen the documents and had killed Gabriel when he discovered her guilt. The trial resulted in a verdict acquitting Kalman of Gabriel's murder and of the further charge that she had urged him to suicide. But—strangely enough—it held her

"morally responsible for his deciding on suicide." However, the State's attorney successfully appealed against that part of the verdict.

Kalman was acquitted by the court but never, 'tis said, by her own emotions, for Gabriel was the love of her life.

Know Your Knits Come Wash Day, For Better Wear

Do you know your knits when it comes to tubbing 'em? Wool knitwear must be washed carefully to guard against its losing its shape in either washing or drying.

Unwashable buttons and shoulder pads should be removed. Put the garment into thick lukewarm suds and squeeze the sudsy water through it, working underwater to save strain on the fibers.

If the knitwear has silk or rayon bindings which remain soiled, lift them slightly out of the water and scrub them with a small soft brush.

When removing the garment from the suds gather it up with both hands so that the water will not stretch it. Rinse carefully at least three times in the lukewarm water until all soap is removed.

If drying forms are not used, pin the garment at 1 or 2 inch intervals to the outline and dry flat, away from excessive heat. Use rust-proof pins and plenty of them to insure an even outline.

Blanket Drying Can Be Speeded

When drying a blanket use two separate clothes lines if possible and distribute the weight of the blanket between the two, with the ends down. Change the position of the blanket during drying to insure against the development of bulges.

Shake the blanket gently occasionally during the drying period. This helps to further fluff up the nap.

When the blanket is dry brush with a soft brush to raise the nap, working in the direction of the binding. Brush both sides. Press binding with a warm iron.

The Gentler Sex

By Melvyn Lindsay

At the Wailing Wall

I.
If only we might have an end of griping.
By civilians safe at home who of small woes are always piping.
Or if only we could have a nice, big sound-proof wailing wall,
To which certain peevish ladies might go and bawl . . . and bawl . . .

II.
The one who in the morning "simply can't get out of bed,"
Without her cup of coffee—and who "might as well be dead."
As do without it at her meals—and what is more, she knows
That "they" have plenty of it hid around, or by the politicians froze.

III.
The one who whines, "Why you can't get service any more!"
And besides all that, it makes her "good and sore"
The way the maids are acting, and how she has to scrub "with her own hands."
The bathroom floor because of labor's unbelievable demands!

IV.
The one who wails because she can't get roast or steak,
And has to take "old veal or lamb," or even worse, must make
A kidney stew, when neither hubby nor herself, nor any of their kin,
Were the kind who could accept such food without very great chagrin.

V.
The one who at the ladies' luncheon works herself into a fret
Because Irish linens are no more and Nylon hose impossible to get,
And copper teapots wholly lacking at the antique shop,
And her hoarded girdles wearing out and no hopes of a rubber crop.

VI.
The one who doesn't see how Christmas shopping ever can be done,
Or how she'll find the proper gifts she owes to every one,
When even now "The way they treat you at the stores,"
Is something that should send you stalking irate through the doors.

VII.
The one who prates of hardships that she meets for lack of gas,
And who is pushed around on street cars by those of common class,
Who can never find a taxi, and must often "walk for blocks,"
And go on busses to receptions in a way most heterodox.

VIII.
The one who's certain she can never face the winter's cold,
With the houses down to 65, and the virgin wool all sold,
And whose Christmas will be ruined if she can't get on a train,
And if from turkey at Thanksgiving this one time she must abstain.

IX.
The ones who of their petty inconveniences continually spout,
And never think what the men of Guadalcanal are having to do without.
Who never stop to ponder on how safe their homes and lives,
While people elsewhere fear the bombs—and gas!—of winter's drives.

X.
The ones who moan of taxes and their lack of clothes and things,
While mothers and wives of fighting men apprehend what each day brings,
The ones who never seem to have learned what the sacrifice is for,
Who after nearly 11 months, do not know this is war!

In the Evening, by the Firelight

By Jeanne Contini

The Post Fashion Editor

After a day of unwinding red tape, ducking in and out of filing cabinets, and beating noiselessly on a typewriter, you owe yourself a good hunk of relaxation when you get home. Regardless of whether you plan to go out later in the evening, you should give yourself at least an hour of just sitting around. And a few nights a week of just reading or mending, or talking to your roommate will do you more good than you realize. The picture of relaxation is not necessarily a limp Raggedy Ann with a blank mind, although a few minutes of lying on the floor with your head down and feet up helps to unkink tense muscles. A great part of relaxation is change . . . of what's been on your mind and your back all day, and general tempo.

For some reason, when you shed your office clothes the accumulated nervousness of business seems to go with them. We suggest a hot bath, providing there's not such a line down the hall that you'll miss dinner. If you expect to spend the rest of the evening at home, put on something comfortable that doesn't require elaborate underpinnings. Be sure, however, it's something you can look at in the mirror without wincing. Old kimonoes are bad for the morale. This does not mean that you have to be done-up . . . not at all, but there are lots of nice-looking lounge clothes that require no effort whatsoever.

Slacks are excellent, as they cover your legs and are adaptable to any position into which you're likely to drape yourself. Flannels keep their shape and are warm. They can also be worn outdoors. Lightweight corduroy is also good. Velvet looks pretty but is a dust catcher. Jersey is wonderfully comfortable, but a cheap quality will bag in the seat. Tweeds are a bit heavy for housewearing. A sweater, shirt (preferably wool or flannel), or a plain round-necked blouse are all fine for the top. Stoles or scarves thrown around the shoulders look very smart, and can make the difference between health and a sniffle.

For the girl who doesn't care about trousers, a robe is the answer. The style doesn't make any difference, but it should be warm and the kind that doesn't cry for the cleaners after two wearings. You might like a brunch coat which is new this season, but we prefer the long ones because they're warmer and you don't have to worry about what you wear underneath. Flannel, wool, corduroy or suede cloth are all fine, and so are quilts.

Our model, leaning on the fireplace (lucky girl), wears a beautifully cut pair of navy pure wool flannel slacks . . . around $7. Her shirt is plaid flannel . . . about $1.50. The wool stole is . . . around $6.

Her roommate has a quilted rayon taffeta robe which we picked because it looks very attractive and is a lot for . . . around $8.

For more information about these clothes, call National 4200, extension 242, between 9:30 a. m. and 5 p. m.

Hand-y Helpers Smooth Them Up

If you can possibly manage it, Ginny Simms says, you should apply a touch of hand lotion to your hands after each washing through the day. If your work is a task that takes you up to the elbows in grease and dirt, you can sometimes help the cause of soft hands along by applying one of the protective soaps or greases to your hands before plunging in.

Last, Ginny calls your attention to the fact that dirt and grease catch in any rough spot in the skin or nails. Neglect 'em and they get worse by the day. Go for 'em nightly—pumice is a great invention to cope with rough skin—smoothing everything down, scrubbing well with good soap, adding softening cream, and the worst of the dirt will give you the go-by, having no place to cling.

Which is okay by you.

School Day Romance Ripens Into Engagement After Lad Joins Army; but as Marriage Date Approaches, Girl Is Beseet by Tense Indecision

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 19 years of age and I am engaged to marry a boy, 22, who is now in the Army. We have been friends for more than five years. We dated all through high school, not steady, but quite often. I dated many other fellows during that time; but I was always very fond of him and we had the understanding that we would be married some time in the future. He joined the Army last spring, gave me an engagement ring in August and we set the wedding date for Christmas, which is drawing near. He has reason to believe he will be permanently stationed at his present base and he wants me to come there to be married. I am employed as a stenographer and would expect to go on working after marriage; making my home where he is and finding a job there. But as the time for marriage draws near, I feel more and more uncertain about what to do.

My parents object somewhat to the marriage at this time; but they want me to decide. They are quite fond of the boy, but my mother is afraid I wouldn't be satisfied to live on the small income we probably would have. Yet they say for me to do as I please, because I have to live my own life, that no one can live it for me; but that they only want my happiness. I am one of those girls who has had everything she needed or desired. The boy has had only two years of college and has no profession nor even an idea of what he might do when he leaves the Army. But he is a smart boy and I feel sure that he would be able to get a good enough job.

Realizes She Can't Stall Indefinitely

I feel that I can't put him off any longer. I intend either to go to him this Christmas and be married or tell him that I am not going to marry him. I have put him off for the last year, hoping conditions would become more favorable, but they haven't. Just a month ago, he sent me a railway ticket, insisting that I come then; but I sent the ticket back and told him I would come at Christmas. He was very much hurt and I can't disappoint him again. Since he has been in the Army, we have seen each other about once every two months; and I still care for him, even while he is away.

So what should I do? Should I go against my parents' wishes (not that they would be angry, you understand) and be married? Or should I keep my present residence and my very good job? If I go to him and get married, it means quitting my job; but I feel sure I wouldn't have any trouble getting another job there. And with both of our salaries, we could manage very nicely. Would you say that I am not too young to be married, if I am very sure of myself? I have faced the fact that he might be sent overseas before the war is over; and, also, I have recognized the possibility that he might not return; but I am sure I would never regret getting married. I wish I could give you more details of the situation, but it would take up too much space. I would like your opinion very soon, because I am anxious to hear what you think I should do.

UNDECIDED.

Prospect of Marriage Has Little Appeal

DEAR UNDECIDED: My impression, indeed, my conviction, concerning the situation is this: You are doing your best to sell yourself a bill of goods in favor of getting married at Christmas; but, actually, the prospect has little, if any, downright appeal. In fact, I judge it to be about as attractive to you, all things considered,—as a dose of castor oil would have been, when you were 6 years old. The crux of your anxious indecision is this: You don't want to be married;—not yet; not to this young man at this time, on the pinchpenny, devil-take-the-future terms that would necessarily obtain.

Frankly, you neither love him enough to welcome that prospect as high adventure; nor are you personally mature enough to face it with philosophic aplomb. However, you are fond of him, on the sentimental basis of a long-time sweethearth association. And because you have tacitly encouraged him for years in the conversationally embroidered fancy that marriage was in the cards, you can scarce muster courage to back down on that understanding, at this late date. And it is in saying that if circumstances were such that you could marry him with all the peace-time furbelows,—church wedding, social-set hullabaloo, nice little home all stocked and waiting, bridegroom with a good job giving promise of steady advancement, etc.,—you would carry through with never a doubting thought as to the wisdom of the move.

From that background, you would regard it both as a lark and a sure thing;—as a step forward into contented security that you had long casually contemplated. In that case, however, it would be not so much the man himself as the way-of-life he was making available to you, that exerted the most powerful appeal. And I think you must admit that it was with this picture of marriage to him in the back of your mind, that you lent encouragement to his matrimonial intentions these past years. But now, with that picture gone into the discard, taking along with it half your incentive to "love, honor and obey" him, and with the wedding date approaching at express-train speed, you find yourself out on the end of the well-known limb, not knowing which way to jump.

No Easy "Out" From Her Dilemma

You shrink from facing the unwelcome truth of your fundamental aversion to the makeshift marriage for various reasons. (1) because, being fond of the boy, you don't want to hurt him; (2) because it would seem (and, indeed, would be) a cruel thing to dash his hopes at the eleventh hour, when he undoubtedly attaches more importance to your allegiance than ever before; and (3) because you can't quite bring yourself to run the risk of forfeiting his friendship altogether, after having fallen into a rut of dependence upon his singlehearted devotion.

In other words, then, it seems to you almost easier to go through with the marriage than to firmly reverse yourself, at this late date, and face up to the painful embarrassment and the readjustments,—emotional and social,—that would in all likelihood ensue. And because you wouldn't care to think you were taking the path of least resistance in holding to the vaguely distasteful course, you have been trying to convince yourself,—and me,—that there is much to be said for it. Look back over your letter, and note the repetitive use of the term, "I feel sure . . ." But not also the pathetic conclusive contradiction of your signature, to-wit: "Undecided."

There is a philosophic maxim to the effect that it is sometimes necessary to be cruel in order to be kind. I think you have reached that paradoxical point in this romance. Marriage is a relationship too profoundly responsible, in its social implications; and a contract too exacting and irrevocable,—in the nature of its effect upon the individual personality,—to be reluctantly undertaken. And your dolorous reluctance to make this marriage, on the only terms possible,—a reluctance that shows through all your protestations to the contrary,—convince me that you shouldn't go through with it; that you should, as the saying goes, "call it off" as much for the boy's sake as your own. Giving voice to that decision and acting accordingly will be painful and difficult, at first. But I venture to say that you will feel as if the burdens of the world had slipped from your shoulders, when you have finally got it into the boy's head that you really don't want, and emphatically don't intend, to marry him for a long time yet. If ever. And certainly not until you have reached the age (say, around 23) when you can face the responsibilities of wifehood with cordial assurance. M. H.

Mrs. Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Household Hints

Wipe furniture to be polished with a cloth dipped in vinegar and water first. It will polish easier, no longer marks will show.

French chalk dusted on will remove most grease spots from wallpaper. Leave it on for several hours, then brush it off with a soft clean cloth or small brush.

Never use soap to clean the ivory keys of your piano—it stains and darkens the ivory. Use cloth moistened with denatured alcohol.

HOUSE CLEANING

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

That trusted "day-worker" is probably off to a war plant and so many a housewife these days is learning that house-cleaning without assistance is more of an art than she had thought. What may have seemed routine with good Mary to help is proving a nuisance to Mrs. America-on-her-own.

Tips to housecleaners are in order. Don't try to do too much at one time. Take a day for bedroom closets, for example, ear-marking clothing for cleaners and moth-proofing, washing down interiors with a disinfectant solution (or any of the excellent paint-cleaners available). Then rest up for a day. Next have a go at the kitchen-cupboards (usually an all-day job in itself). Plan to store much of the china you don't use during these busy days and keep your eye peeled for utensils you rarely use—add them to your scrap pile. In passing pity the British housewife who would give her all for fresh shellpaper, practically impossible to come by in England. Wax the painted shelves and eliminate shell-paper, where china is stored.

Combine window washing and woodwork cleaning, room by room. With closets and cupboards routed, windows and woodwork sparkling, your worst tasks are over, and you can go ahead with the usual cleaning of each room as time permits. Usually you will want to do the living room first—vacuum cleaning everything, upholstery, hanging lamp shades, both sides of rugs.

A good plan for any room's cleaning calls for ceiling to floor routine—start at the top and work down. Don't forget your books—vacuum clean each one and take time to rearrange your volumes in a more efficient "librarian" fashion. Have on hand plenty of wax and polish, clean cloths (old bed sheets and old knitted underwear make mighty fine rubber-downers), pails, brushes, cleansers and old-fashioned elbow grease.

Plan simple one-dish meals for those days when you are chasing dirt. Don't try to do too much in one day—gauge your own abilities and plan to knock off early enough (without leaving everything in an upheaval) so that you can soak in a warm, scented bath and relax before dinner.

While you're at the job, keep your eyes open for all kinds of scrap. And eliminate, as much as possible, the gew-gaws and hoarded unnecessary that complicate weekly cleaning jobs. And above all, keep your chin up—determine that the Army and the Navy won't be the only ones to speak proudly about "spit and polish."

Keeping Mentally Fit for War Emergencies

By Logan Clendenen, M. D.

Keeping fit under any circumstances involves three somewhat separate but interrelated activities: the mind, the nutrition and the muscles. It would be hard to say which is most important; this depends on just what you are expecting your body to do. If training for an athletic contest, muscular hygiene is primary. Starting out on any kind of stint of work, nutrition and good muscles and circulation contribute to the balance of the mind.

In such terrific emergencies as we are living through now, I am inclined to think mental hygiene takes first place.

I do not believe public officials, newspapers, magazines, radio announcers, feature and editorial writers always realize the effect of what they are saying and announcing on ordinary minds—and that includes the majority of us. Nor especially the effect on minds that are not quite stable.

Even the most vigorous and courageous and optimistic minds are staggered at times by what is going on around us. How must the impact of these events affect those who were never designed for great responsibility or intensive thinking.

Martha Elynn's Platter Chatter

Adventure into the favorite dishes of other countries always pays good appetite dividends. Nowadays it may be a thrifty way also of putting a whole-some main dish before the family, that calls for little meat.

Enchiladas are a tempting food that have drifted across the border from Mexico, and are a tempting food that have drifted across the border from Mexico, and are a tempting food that have drifted across the border from Mexico.

Martha Elynn cult to prepare. You can make enough filling for six servings from one pound ground raw veal. Ripe olives, meat and peppery flavoring go into the filling for this restful entree.

The following recipe for enchiladas comes from the test kitchen of the California Foods Research Institute, San Francisco, California.

Enchiladas

FILLING—Heat ¼ cup oil or fat in a large skillet. Add 1 pound ground raw veal and fry and stir about five minutes. Add 1½ teaspoons salt, 1 tablespoon minced onion, 1 small clove garlic, 1 tablespoon paprika and 3 tablespoons flour and stir to blend. Add 2 cups water and bring to a boil, stirring continuously. Add 1 cup whole ripe olives and let cook slowly about 15 minutes.

Tortillas are delicious and are not the culinary mysteries they used to be. However, if they still seem mysterious to you follow this recipe and they will become an easy food to make.

TORTILLAS—Combine ¼ cup corn meal, 1¼ cups sifted all-purpose flour, ½ teaspoon salt and ½ cup water and mix. Roll into five very thin rounds. Fry in deep fat until edges are slightly brown. Place a tortilla in baking dish, cover with filling and sprinkle with some chopped onion and grated cheese. Top with second tortilla and repeat until all five are used. The top should be filling, cheese and onion. Cover and bake about 10 minutes in a moderate oven. Slice in wedges to serve.

Variety is one of the beauties of Chinese cookery. The Chinese have long been noted for their healthful dishes, and practically all of them are as economical as healthful for they consist principally of vegetables, combined with small pieces of meat. It is the seasonings that make them distinctive.

Egg rolls are one of the foods of the Chinese that have general appeal. When you first taste of their goodness you think they must be very difficult to prepare. I thought that until I was told by Chef Charley Young of the Chinese restaurant, Ruby Foo, just how to make them. The following is the recipe for making these delicious rolls:

Egg Rolls

First prepare the filling and then make the pastry covers. The recipe for the filling is:

FILLING—Combine equal portions of celery, bamboo shoots, pimiento, water chestnuts, and a portion equaling the same amount as the vegetables, of shrimp. Florida "green shrimp"

are preferred as they do not have the strong iodine flavor that some shrimp do. Add salt to taste, and a pinch of sugar. Add 1 teaspoon of chef seasoning powder or 1 cup of concentrated chicken broth. Chop the vegetables fine. Peel and clean the shrimp, then dice them. Mix all ingredients together and steam for 15 minutes, or until excess juice has simmered out. Squeeze into strainer to eliminate all of moisture.

Next prepare the covers according to the following recipe: COVERS—Combine ¾ cup pastry flour with ¼ cup water chestnut flour or use same amount of cornstarch and flower mixed. Add a pinch of salt and a pinch of sugar, and ½ teaspoon baking powder. Add 2 eggs. Next add sufficient water to make a medium batter and mix thoroughly. Grease pan as you would for griddle cakes. Remove pan from fire. Then pour batter into pan, just enough to cover the bottom of the pan. Pour off any excess. Put back on the fire and keep on fire just long enough (about two minutes) for the batter to set. Do not fry or let become crisp. Do not let crust form. It must be soft. Roll ingredients in leaves and tuck in ends. Cement ends with raw beaten egg. Fry in deep fat, 360 degrees, until crisp. Serve with mixture of mustard and duck sauce.

Egg rolls as pictured here, are one of the best liked Chinese foods. The goodness of tender vegetables and fresh shrimp, seasoned in the distinctive Chinese way, are enveloped in a thin pastry covering which has been fried to crispness in deep fat. These rolls will make the most avid meat-eater forget a shortage is in supply.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

It isn't always enough to know what medicines a child has to take; the big job is to get him to take them. The doctor comes in, studies the child, writes out a prescription and then it is up to the parent to see that the medicine goes down.

When the child is so sick as to need medicine, he is also too sick to be argued and fussed with when in his unreasonable-ness he refuses to take it.

Here are a few suggestions, culled from personal experience, which may prove helpful in such emergencies.

Many of the present-day sulfa drugs come in tablet form and young children find tablets difficult to swallow. They stick on top of their tongues. If the child can be shown how to put the tablet back of the tongue and drink water quickly, the tablet, if not too large, slips over the tongue easily.

If this doesn't work, the tablet may have to be mashed. Use a wooden potato masher or a wooden mallet for this and make the particles fine so they won't stick in the child's throat. They may be mixed with a combination of fruit and water, in small amounts. One teaspoonful of anything is easier to get down than a portion in a glass. Follow immediately with full strength fruit juice, to hasten the taste away.

These same fine crumbs may be mixed in a teaspoonful of tart jelly and given on a mouthful of bread or a crisp cracker. One young man got down three tablets of Brewer's yeast daily in this manner.

If the child likes soft cheese, it may be concealed in the cheese and then spread on cracker. It should be just one mouthful, no more, to be followed by water.

As the child gets old enough to handle spoons and bottle effectively he should pour his own medicine and take it himself. It is the being told that he "must"

do this and the distastefulness of having medicine held in front of him and being made to swallow it that minute which causes many a child to rebel.

A clock placed by the bed, indicating the time for medicine, and the bottle and clean spoon handy on a small tray, will encourage the child to feel grown-up when he measures his own dose and manfully downs it.

Our attitude when we take medicine is enormously influential to the child. We should make it known when we have to take pills or powders and give the child an excellent example of our stature in being able to swallow them, even though they do not taste pleasant.

Our leaflet, "Diet and Amusements for the Convalescent Child," may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

We Make a Hosiery Drive!

By Marianne

COLOR FOR FADED-HOSE:

A treasure hunt is on in your boudoir. The lucky person finds a perfectly good pair of silk hose discarded in happier days when faded hose were doomed to an uneventful life in dresser drawer. But now is the time for all good women to gather up these deferred assets in the form of faded nylons, silk, or lisle and dye them to look like new.

You'll be glad to know there is a new and excellent hosiery dye on the market. It comes in three shades, suntan, sunbeige, and mauve taupe, and the color does not fade with washing. One box for 25 cents will dye six pairs—and you know it would cost 50 cents a pair if you had them done. If you have two odd stockings that don't match, dye them to make a pair!

MEND THEM YOURSELF!

If you've a bit of patience and dexterity with the needle, we recommend that you do your own repair work via a special hosiery needle. We were skeptical at first, we must admit but users say that it's really quite simple, you really can't tell they have been repaired, and it saves you money. Directions come with the needle.

SOME TIPS

Most repair counters are partial to silk and nylon, but we're glad to say we've found a repair counter that will cater to your cottons and rayons as well. Also another that will repair your silk mesh.

Experience has shown that it really takes four weeks (and quite often longer) to have your hose repaired. So don't waste your time making useless trips to the repair counter.

If you do have a run, don't try to sew it before you take it to the repair counter. It might be a stitch in time, but you'll probably have to take out nine before they'll repair it! The clerk will tell you whether they are worth repairing and whether or not you should sew part of it.

Please hold on to that receipt! Losing it may mean that it is impossible for you to claim your hosiery.

Please call National 4200 Extension 242 between 9:30 a. m. and 5 p. m. for further information.

Anyone With Allergy Should Try To Keep Baby From Getting It

By Ida Jean Kain

If you are allergic and you are going to have a baby, the time to do something about his allergy is now. You may be able to keep him from getting it. Certainly, it is worth while to try.

In a recent article in Hygeia Magazine, you are warned not to give in to a craving for any particular dish. Eating too much of a food may cause the child to develop a sensitivity to it. You should avoid an excessive intake of such foods as chocolate, nuts and eggs, which are the common trouble makers. Any expectant mother should be careful to get all the protective foods, but this is especially important when an allergy runs in the family.

And if you nurse the baby later, you will still have to be careful of your diet. You will have to stay away from any of the foods that have brought on digestive upsets, rashes or any other discomfort.

When you start giving the baby other foods like eggs try him out on a tiny bit of the yolk to see how he reacts. It may be all right in his diet. Then you can gradually increase the amount until he gets the whole egg yolk.

You are advised to watch out for dust in the nursery and to use cotton blankets and clothing for him, rather than woolen or silk. The floor covering should be hard surfaced and easily washed. He doesn't use a pillow so you won't have to bother about that. But when he gets older, have him sleep on a cotton or kapok pillow, rather than one filled with feathers. A feather filled pillow should be covered with some nonallergic cloth.

Even his pets must be selected with care. Some cases of chronic bronchitis and asthma show marked reactions to dog and cat hair. (So, no horsehair mattress.) Copyright, 1942, King Features, Inc.

Glamour Spies of World War II

Kalman de Litke of Counter-Espionage

By Secret Agent X

The ace counter-espionage of Poland, just before World War II, was a beautiful blonde, Kalman de Litke of Warsaw, daughter of the Field Marshal of Poland. One of her assignments was via fast plane to Vienna to check on a spy of the Russian OGPU, but as soon as she reached there she was thrown into a cell where she received a call from the statuesque Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, ex-vice Chancellor of Austria. Presenting Austria's apologies, he liberated her and stating that her prey had escaped Vienna asked her to help him to check on one Capt. Gabriel Ruttkay of the Hungarian General Staff suspected of selling military secrets to the highest bidder. With the permission of her chief, she hurried to Budapest. To place the seductive Kalman into the arms of Ruttkay the Budapest Military Intelligence prompted a grand ball.

They fell in love at first sight and Gabriel carried her off to his apartment where she remained for several days and nights. But in the middle of each night, while Gabriel slept heavily from the wine he had drunk, Kalman ransacked his rooms. Finding a hidden door, she managed to unlock it with a skeleton key and found behind it a complete photographic laboratory. With a flashlight, she found negatives of War Office documents and plans, including those of a newly-invented machine gun, the pride of the Hungarian ordnance department.

Then came the sickening morning when she kissed her lover goodbye and hurried to the window to get her last look at him as he went gallily out onto the pavement. Kalman was packing to leave the apartment when Gabriel burst in upon her and fired two shots at her. But his hand was trembling so with nervousness that it missed its mark. Then he threw the gun at her, missing her again, and rushing for her he tripped, falling heavily to the floor, where he still lay when she fled from the apartment, taking his pistol with her, but leaving a small automatic of her own. Escaping to the Intelligence Division she learned that Gabriel had just been discovered dead, shot by a bullet

The Budapest Civil Police who were rushed to his apartment in ignorance of Gabriel's treason, probed the bullet from his fatal wound and finding that it was identical with those found in Kalman's little pistol but much smaller than two other bullets dug from the wall, persisted in their deduction that after firing twice in his own defense the captain of the guard had been fatally shot by his mistress.

So Kalman de Litke was arrested and Gabriel's family was sufficiently powerful to bring her to trial, claiming it was she who had stolen the documents and had killed Gabriel when he discovered her guilt. The trial resulted in a verdict acquitting Kalman of Gabriel's murder and of the further charge that she had urged him to suicide. But—strangely enough—it held her

"morally responsible for his deciding on suicide." However, the State's attorney successfully appealed against that part of the verdict.

Kalman was acquitted by the court but never, "he said, by her own emotions, for Gabriel was the love of her life.

Know Your Knits Come Wash Day, For Better Wear

Do you know your knits when it comes to tubbing 'em? Wool knitwear must be washed carefully to guard against its losing its shape in either washing or drying.

Unwashable buttons and shoulder pads should be removed. Put the garment into thick lukewarm suds and squeeze the sudsy water through it, working underwater to save strain on the fibers.

If the knitwear has silk or rayon bindings which remain soiled, lift them slightly out of the water and scrub them with a small soft brush.

When removing the garment from the suds gather it up with both hands so that the water will not stretch it. Rinse carefully at least three times in the lukewarm water until all soap is removed.

If drying forms are not used, pin the garment at 1 or 2 inch intervals to the outline and dry flat, away from excessive heat. Use rust-proof pins and plenty of them to insure an even outline.

Blanket Drying Can Be Speeded

When drying a blanket use two separate clothes lines if possible and distribute the weight of the blanket between the two, with the ends down. Change the position of the blanket during drying to insure against the development of bulges.

Shake the blanket gently occasionally during the drying period. This helps to further fluff up the nap.

When the blanket is dry brush with a soft brush to raise the nap, working in the direction of the binding. Brush both sides. Press binding with a warm iron.

How Junior Alliance Chief Collects Bond Fund

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Staff Editor

She has a bomb bank in the living room for quarters. An old glass jar in the kitchen catches the nickels and dimes.

A discarded beer stein in the bedroom gets the pennies. That's the way Mrs. Carlton C. Duffus, president of the Junior Alliance, quickly accumulates a tidy sum for war bonds and stamps.

Definitely war bond conscious — so is her husband — she deposits all bridge earnings or pocket change in one of the many savings banks placed in every room in the house.

Not only does the youthful president of the Junior Alliance save her own money for war bonds and stamps but also she keeps devising means for the club to buy more and more. Then that's only one of her many contributions to the war effort. You'll find her sewing at the Red Cross several times a week. At present she's busy learning Spanish . . . all for the sake of furthering the Good Neighbor Policy with our Latin American friends.

Aside from aiding the war, Mrs. Duffus' first interest is in her home. "I'm no career woman," she said. "Just a home body." That probably accounts for her views on women's best contribution to the war effort.

Should Stay Home

"Young married women with families would do more to help win the war," she averred, "if they would stay home, do their own work and look after the children, rather than footing it around to committee meetings, worrying about what they can do."

In Mrs. Duffus' opinion too many women waste time worrying about what they can do rather than actually doing something concrete.

Still another bit of war economy practiced by youthful Mrs. Duffus is the making over of her clothes for the duration. Instead of buying new ones, she sketches a pattern, cuts and remakes her coats, hats and dresses. When it comes to making a hat, she's a wiz. However she takes no credit for her talents at hat-making but attributes her flair to a long line of expert milliners in the family. Cooking is another spot where Mrs. Duffus excels. In fact, she holds a degree in home economics from the University of Minnesota.

In keeping with her idea of saving for war bonds, the Junior

Alliance has cut out all big parties for the duration. Heretofore, the club has swung many a gala affair, but as long as the war lasts, its purely social events will be limited to two—every other will be a benefit.

While the club—composed of 37 alert young women—is focusing its attention on war work, it is not overlooking its home charities. Each year the Junior Alliance has given a Christmas party at the Thomson School and has furnished the children with milk and crackers for the mid-morning lunch. Forty coats and blankets were given the school last year. Members will continue this project.

Mrs. Kerr to Speak

Mrs. John Morrison Kerr, State chairman of the Red Cross committee, will speak at a meeting of the Major L'Enfant Chapter, D. A. R., to be held at 8 p. m. Saturday at the Chapter House.

Overseas Unit Holds Annual Fete Sunday

The annual November reunion luncheon of the Washington Unit of the Women's Overseas Service League will be held Sunday at 1 p. m. in the private dining room of the Hay-Adams House.

This reunion is usually the largest gathering of the unit members during the year, and each year a number of them wear the uniforms that they wore in their service with the A. E. F. in the first World War.

The unit president, Mrs. Virginia Armistead Nelson, will preside, and the guest speaker will be Mrs. Grace Hendrick Eustis, editor of the Volunteer, monthly publication of the volunteer special services of the American Red Cross. Mrs. Eustis will speak of conditions in England as she saw them on her recent visit there with Mrs. Dwight Davis, the national director of Volunteer Services of the American Red Cross.

D. A. R. Luncheon Set Saturday

The national project of the Daughters of the American Revolution to buy and equip more blood plasma mobile units for the American Red Cross and the part the District of Columbia chapters will play in it will be discussed by Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, State chairman of the committee for national defense, at a luncheon to be given by the Anne Hill and Eleanor Wilson Chapters at 1:30 p. m. Saturday at the Chapter House.

Mrs. C. H. Lane, regent of Eleanor Wilson Chapter, will preside at the meeting following the luncheon. Assisting hostesses are Mrs. Guy Mason, Mrs. Harry Wilhoit, Mrs. E. S. Calbreath, Mrs. George F. Warner, Mrs. George Phillips, Mrs. H. P. Harnsberger and Mrs. J. H. Graves.

Writers League To Mark Birthday

The Writers League of Washington will celebrate its twenty-fifth birthday this month. It was announced at a recent meeting.

A program was given by the following members at the meeting: Stories by Miss Georgia Redway and Miss Gladys G. Smith; an article by Mrs. Ethel H. Allen and poems by E. W. Baker, Mrs.

Agnes D. Wright, Miss Lella Wood and Mrs. Eva Grant Marshall.

No Quakes

Only three States in this country have entirely escaped earthquakes in historical times.

Mrs. Ryan to Address Magruder D. A. R. Unit

Chairman of the new committee on American Indians, Mrs. Edwin J. Ryan will describe the work of this group at a meeting of the Capt. Joseph Magruder Chapter, D. A. R., at a meeting to be held at 1 p. m. tomorrow at the Chapter House.

Marian Anderson, D.A.R. Again Fail to Agree; Concert Is Off

Because Marian Anderson, noted Negro contralto, refused to accept the invitation of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, as extended and insisted that the organization set a precedent in permitting other Negro artists to appear in concerts at Constitution Hall before a mixed and unsegregated audience, the concert at which she was asked to sing has been called off.

The executive committee, following action by the National Board of Management at a meeting here October 30, sent a letter to Sol Hurok, manager of Miss Anderson, expressing regret that the invitation sent to the artist to appear in a benefit concert had not been accepted as extended.

Text of the letter sent to Mr. Hurok by Fred Hand, managing director of Constitution Hall, follows:

"Dear Mr. Hurok: "Supplementing my letter of October 9, I have submitted your favor of October 3 to the executive committee of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, for its consideration.

"In reply thereto, I am instructed to advise you that the invitation sent you under date of September 28, 1942, was the same as that thus far extended to other artists for War Benefit Concerts. It is regretted that Miss Anderson, through you, her manager, has not accepted the invitation as extended.

"No appearance of any artist, attraction or event can ever be considered as a precedent insofar as future engagements in Constitution Hall are concerned.

"Very truly yours, "FRED E. HAND, "Managing Director, Constitution Hall."

It will be recalled that the D. A. R., in an attempt to heal a breach and to settle the controversy provoked in 1939 by its refusal to rent Constitution Hall to Miss Anderson for concert appearance, had invited the great contralto to appear in a benefit concert there this winter.

Controversy Revived

Seizing a chance to get even with the society that once had barred her from its stately and privately owned hall, Miss Anderson again provoked the race controversy when she insisted that the D. A. R. lift its ban against Negro performers and permit members of her race to attend the concert in which she was asked to appear. Furthermore, she stipulated that in the future Negro performers be allowed to appear in the hall before mixed audiences. Also, that there be no segregation of races in the audiences. In addition, she asked the proviso that she name the war agency that would get the proceeds from her concert appearance.

Refusing to be dictated to, the proud sisters of the national society leave the invitation as is — to be taken or left, according to the wisdom of Miss Anderson's manager.

The D. A. R.'s refusal to rent the hall for an Anderson concert in 1939 caused a Nation-wide controversy which was climaxed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt resigning from the organization in protest. After unsuccessful attempts to obtain Central High School and other auditoriums in Washington for the concert, Miss Anderson gained the backing of Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes and appeared on Easter Sunday in an open air concert at the Lincoln Memorial.

Thus with dignity, the N. S. D. A. R. has closed the Anderson incident. At least that is the hope expressed by members of the organization.

Plan War Benefits

In the meantime, the D. A. R. continues to go forward in its plans for a series of war benefits, proceeds of which will be turned over to accredited war relief agencies.

Mrs. William H. Pouch, president general, announced yesterday further expansion of the blood plasma program, following action by the executive committee.

The society will provide funds for establishment of two permanent blood donor centers for the American Red Cross. It also will purchase at least 10 mobile blood plasma units, for collection of blood donations by the Red Cross, and as the American Red Cross expands its centers, many more mobile units will be taken.

TIME TO REMODEL!

By Cecilia Mesurac

"What do you mean, you don't have a thing to wear—why, that closet is full of clothes!" The dear man is right. The closet is full of clothes—not because you're extravagant but because you're thrifty, thrifty enough to think half of the dresses are too good to discard. But still they're not good enough to wear! Well, then, make them wearable. Launch your own private "salvage campaign" and set about remodeling and revising smartly.

What makes those dresses the step-children of your wardrobe? Perhaps the shoulders are wrong somehow, or the neckline is uncomfortably high. The skirt or whole dress is too tight in the wrong places. Or there's a rip at the armhole or across the shoulders, or—the most frequent calamity of all—a bad stain under the arms. Whatever the difficulty, this is no time to waste the fabric and the money that you put into it.

First try on the dress as it is and take a good look at the details. It can sometimes gain a new lease on life without ripping a seam. Don't create a large sewing project for yourself if none is necessary. If you find that remodeling is required, select a pattern which follows the original lines of the dress most closely. Pattern companies now are pointing out which patterns will help make over old clothes and create new ones. (Our leaflet lists a special selection of these.)

Many dresses can be restored to wearability by a simple step. Are the shoulders unbecoming? A new smaller, flatter shoulder pad will help eliminate that "all shoulder" look. If they sag, a new pad, sewn inside the top sleeve will bolster it up into a trim, neat line. Consider the use of epaulets, which are so fashionable at this time, if you want to add new life to that simple tailored dress.

A Changed Neckline

The neckline is often another simple adjustment. Merely removing the collar may suggest many new treatments. A deep roll-back collar may look smarter than the present Peter Pan; the ripping of the center front seam of the blouse will give a plunging V—this can be worn with a dickey or can be lined with dainty lace or fluffy ruffling. Add a decorative clip set low to emphasize the deep neckline. Two clips or pins placed off-center will pull back the V into a heart-shaped neckline. All of these variations can happen if you rip one row of stitches!

The most common make-over problem involves the dress which suddenly has grown too tight in the front even after all the available seam allowance has been let out. Add breathing space by adding a new blouse front. Consider the type of sleeve-joining and the amount of waist-fullness of the dress and choose a pattern which follows as nearly as possible the original pattern of the dress.

Torn Armholes

Pepping armhole seams or an uncomfortable pull across the shoulder are other major problems. Solve them by adding a new deep yoke to relieve the tension. Select a pattern having a straight-line yoke which joins the blouse just above the bustline and extends an equal distance down the back. The wool dress illustrated shows the addition of such a yoke. This gave added width through the shoulders and at the same time eliminated a stained underarm section. It provided a chance for an interesting—and more becoming—new neckline too.

A new yoke can stop at the sleeve seam, to allow the use of the original sleeves if they are in good condition. Or you can cut a new top half to the sleeves to match the yoke. In some styles the yoke and the sleeves are cut as one piece, eliminating shoulder seams to give entirely new raglan sleeves. These suggestions are excellent for replacing a worn or ripped armhole seam.

For widening the blouse of a dress with front-skirt fullness, there is a new vestee-like inset pattern (we list it on our leaflet) which extends from the shoulder seams but which leaves the original side seams intact. The points of the vestee fit into the gathers below the waistline. Stained underarms ruin a dress for polite company. To eliminate the offending portions, join contrasting sleeves to the blouse with insets of the same new material. One of the patterns we list in our leaflet has a sleeve set in at a right angle much like a high-cut jumper.

Another easily accomplished trick to eliminate underarm stains is to cut the neck lower in front and back; remove the sleeves and underarms entirely to make yourself a jumper. If the back of the dress as well as the underarm is faded, there is also a remedy. One pattern effective in this case provides an entirely new back blouse, new sleeves and insets which extend almost to the center front of the blouse.

If the top of the dress is so far gone that it is not worth fixing, perhaps the skirt material is far too good to waste. Sever the entire top from the skirt and make a new blouse similar in design to the old one. The discarded top will probably yield enough good material to enable you to make collars and cuffs to match the skirt. One pattern useful in this case substitutes a short waist of contrasting material and uses the old sleeves, skirt and the yoke from the old dress. Another adds a new long torso blouse to the old dress skirt and uses the original sleeves and yoke of the dress.

Housecoats Redeemed

Housecoats are especially prone to pop at sleeve and armhole—yet the yards of goods in the skirt should certainly be salvaged. The one we illustrate presented a number of problems due to its priority-straight skirt, the border design down the front, as well as the shoulder tear. We featured the border design as an integral part of the design in the mother-daughter pinafores. If your torn housecoat has a very full, sweeping skirt make a dress for you or your daughter, a peasant skirt to wear with blouses or jackets. Or cut down the skirt to street length and make a bolero or blouse of the remaining material, using the entire skirt length of the housecoat.

Too-tight skirts can be a major tragedy. One remedy for this, especially if the dress is silk, is to add additional panels midway between the center skirt seams and the side seams. These panels extend from the waistline only, leaving the waist unaltered. But a collar-like yoke of the same material might be added to the dress top to balance the new additions to the skirt.

If you have a dress that once

had the smart back fullness in the skirt and you would now like to bring it up to date with peptop front fullness, again notice the wool dress illustrated. The opening midway between the left seam and the center front. Insert a pleated panel to add extra freedom as well as additional color. On silk dresses make the new panel of a print; use a bright solid-colored inset for sheer wools. Cuffs and collars of matching material will make the dress look as if it had been originally designed with these panel insets.

The Button-Front Dress

The button-down-the-front dress that is just too tight all the way up and down can be made to fit you again thus: Remove the buttons and buttonholes. Select the pattern on our list which has a single full-length contrasting panel down the front and cut the needed piece. If still more width is needed this same pattern provides a back panel of the same contrasting material.

If the button-front dress gapes chiefly over the hips, try leaving the bottom half open from the waist down. Make an attractive ruffled petticoat of some print material either new or salvaged from an old dress.

If you are still hesitant about beginning on your salvage sewing career, consult your local sewing center for suggestions on redesigning, pattern alterations and cutting and fitting the dress itself. You can leave both pattern and material there and an expert will cut and fit it for you.

If you can't sew at all, join the salvage drive on clothes anyway. Relief agencies are very anxious to secure clothing of all types.

Whether you consider your cast-original gathered back of the skirt was brought around to form the draped front, the front was carried to the back.

Officer Lure Seen Army, Navy Delay

Mad Quest for Commissions Takes Much Time and Effort of Leaders

This is the first of a series of three articles by Bob Considine.

By Bob Considine

Copyright by International News Service

A great American general once wrote, in connection with his Army's need of officers: "If you can fill these positions with proper officers, not the relatives and social friends of the commanders, who, however agreeable their company, are not always the most useful, you might hope to have the finest Army in the world."

As topical as this may appear, what with certain sections of Congress and the citizenry up in arms about the commissioning from civil life of columnists, playboys, movie figures and broken-down athletes, it was written by Robert E. Lee to his President, Jefferson Davis, early in the war between the States.

The Army, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard, fighting for their hides in history's most desperate war, are doing their best to live up to the sound advice of the great Confederate. And they are doing it in the face of bitterly articulated criticism and heavy political pressure.

Washington Brass Hats

At the War and Navy Departments in Washington, harried brass hats have lost track of the number of Congressmen who have visited the departments leading by the hand the good, bad and plain incompetent sons of important constituents, all of whom have been led to believe that one word from Congress makes a born grocery clerk into a lieutenant commander and two words make a natural refrigerator salesman into a colonel.

Don't think for an instant that men conveyed to the departments by such statesmen are not given special attention. They are! The brass hats, who had to beg a hard-of-hearing Congress for peace-time positions, will do everything in their power to reject congressionally-backed applicants for commissions. They'll mark their applications with that dreaded pencil notation, "P. I." It doesn't stand for the Philippine Islands. It means "political influence" and it's a hard curse, no matter how eligible the would-be officer is.

Occasionally the "P. I." is so potent that the civilian beneficiary quickly finds himself in the handsome trappings of an officer. But almost before he can strut his stuff in Washington's gossipy Mayflower lounge, or in his home town, ways and means are found to send him to the bleakest or most arid war theater available. More than one "friend of a friend" is in Iceland for the duration.

5000 A Week Arrive

Something like 5000 applications for commissions arrive at the offices of the armed forces each week. But only a moderate proportion of those who want to be officers want to soil their hands with the grim realities of war. A lot of applicants want the uniform and the braid, without the responsibility.

Men whose draft status is 1-A are no longer eligible to receive commissions. But the gradual encroachment of the draft on men in the older brackets has more than maintained the interest of the average American in becoming an officer. The better-than-average American of 40, plus, has bombarded the proper authorities with applications—in some cases demands—for commissions. Their sentiments seem to be summed up by one who complained thusly to a stone-faced old West Pointer:

"Look here, old man," said the draft-imperiled older, "I'm in no condition to be a private and keep up with those 19 and 20 year old kids. Besides, I'm accustomed to handling men. I've got a lot of men working for me right now. My success has proved that mentally and spiritually I'm a cut above the average. Besides, what would my friends think if I'm inducted as if I were a nobody? I have a certain position to maintain."

We happen to have a verbatim report of the officer's answer: "If you think so much of the position you must maintain, you should be willing to fight for it," the officer answered. "If you're as superior as you say you are, and I don't say you're not, your talents will soon be recognized and you'll be advanced through officers' candidate school."

Press Agent's Request

A New York night-club press agent, more than somewhat on the prissy side, asked for a lieutenant commander's rank in exchange for which he promised to get the Navy mentioned favorably in Broadway columns. Another, one of the richest young men in the country, imported a friend of the family to arrange an interview for him with a certain important colonel. The colonel agreed to see the youth and do everything he could for him.

The young man raced to the colonel's office, did not recognize him and got off to a beautiful start by asking, "Is this where they give out commissions?"

The colonel, who came up the hard way from the ranks, smiled tightly and said, "Well... yes. But this isn't the day. Won't you sit down and tell me some of your qualifications?"

The young man rattled along at a fast clip, referring more than once to the awe-inspiring sum of money left to him by his grandfather. When he was done he detected a certain lack of sunshine in the colonel's face, particularly after he said he would settle for a majority.

"As I see it," the colonel finally answered, "the only thing you have to recommend you is that you're worth 20 million dollars. But, of course, we're going to take that from you to fight this war."

The young man changed his tune. He said, "Now, colonel, don't get

While Train Waited Yanks Get First Lady's Autograph

By the Associated Press

Cambridge, Eng., Nov. 4.—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was besieged by United States soldiers imploring her to autograph hastily torn sheets of note paper today during an interlude in a quick tour of educational centers and rural areas of Cambridgeshire.

Her desk was the back of Pvt. Harry Goldstein of Newark, N. J., who hunched over, wisecracking with Pvt. Alfred Forestieri of Wilmington, Del., in a British leave center.

Other soldiers crowded around and the First Lady kept saying, "This is the last," until she finally pulled her away to the train.

Her day began at Cambridge University, where she visited a hotel now converted into an American Red Cross club run by Helen Page of Philadelphia.

She found dozens of Americans among British soldiers and fliers at a WVS center, among them Sgt. Robert Krieger of Milwaukee, Sgt. Thomas Miller of New Milford, N. J.; Sgt. Melvin Bishop of Ada, Okla., and Sgt. Wynn Jones of Norristown, Pa.

Clinic to Operate With Short Staff

The Hollingsworth Clinic, 1418 Good Hope Road Southeast, will remain open on a partly staffed basis, Dr. Russell K. Hollingsworth, founder and head of the clinic, said yesterday. The clinic has been faced with suspension of operations since July due to the shortage of physicians.

We got about 8,000 more from the R. O. T. C. and a couple of thousand from our aviation cadet training schools. In time our officers candidate schools will be turning out 75,000 lieutenants a year. We'll need more than that. And we'll always need certain officers for certain jobs, and the only way we'll ever get such men is to reach into civilian life and make the offer as attractive as we can.

"I say there are weaklings and incompetents in every organization," he continued. "But the Army and Navy have been fortunate. We've been right more often in the selection of our men than any other business you can name."

(TOMORROW: Should civilians be given higher ranks than experienced regulars in the Army and Navy?)

U. S. Indicts Sugar Firm For Peonage

By the Associated Press

Tampa, Fla., Nov. 4.—District Attorney Herbert S. Phillips announced today that Federal Grand Jury indictments had been returned against the United States Sugar Corporation, its personnel manager and three of its camp superintendents charging them with holding Negro sugar-cane workers in conditions of peonage.

An indictment also was returned against Sheriff Jeff Wiggins of Glades County charging him with working county prisoners on, his own farm without pay, in violation of the Federal civil rights and anti-peonage statutes, Phillips said.

The indictment in the sugar-cane workers case named as defendants the Sugar Corporation, M. E. Von Mach, personnel manager at the company's Clewiston, Fla., office; Evan Ward McLeod, superintendent of the South Shore Camp; and a superintendent named Neal, whose first name Phillips did not know, of the Miami Locks Camp.

One count of the indictment charged that the defendants "injured, oppressed, threatened and intimidated" Negro field workers to prevent the free exercise of their rights under the Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution and held them in involuntary servitude.

The second count charged they conspired to violate Federal anti-peonage statutes.

Phillips said the first count carried a maximum penalty of 10 years' imprisonment and $5000 fine and the second count two years' imprisonment and $10,000 fine.

The district attorney said the indictments grew out of an investigation directed by Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge, following complaints received by the Justice Department that the sugar corporation recruited Negro workers in Southern States for employment on its sugar plantations near Clewiston, offering free transportation.

Upon arrival, Phillips related, the Negroes said they were notified that they were indebted to the company for the cost of transportation and that the debt had to be worked out before they could leave. Workers who attempted to escape were apprehended and returned to the plantation, he declared.

British Army Chief's Wife Feels 'Related' to U.S.A.

MRS. GORDON NEVIL MACREADY

One of Her Ancestors Fought to Help
America Win Its Independence

By Carolyn Bell

Although she's scarcely been here a fortnight, Mrs. Gordon Nevil Macready, wife of the Chief of the British Army Staff here, feels "related" to the whole U. S. A.—but there is a good reason for it.

She is a daughter of the Duc de Noailles—head of one of the oldest and greatest houses of France—and it was her distinguished ancestor of that name who fought side by side with Lafayette and George Washington in the Revolution. "Being prejudiced a bit," she said with a chuckle, "we feel the Duc did as much for America as Lafayette."

And so American history is neither new or uninteresting to this lively Frenchwoman who is the wife of a lieutenant general outranked in Washington only by Field Marshal Dill. The Macreadys are still very much "on the wing," as she only arrived in this country several weeks ago and is not yet settled. "However, we think we have found a cunning little house in Georgetown," she added.

One-time tennis champion of France ("I won't tell you how many years ago," she giggled), Mrs. Macready is hoping that there in the Capital she will find the time and place to start playing again. She also played at Wimbledon for a number of years. In London she had a full-time war job from 10 until 5:30 o'clock every day and so naturally had little time for her favorite sport. In London she worked for the French committee of the British Red Cross and says she undoubtedly will find plenty of work to do around here once she looks for it.

Met Husband In Versailles

To the inevitable question, "How do you like Washington?" she replied, "It's a beautiful city and I find the people here friendly and nice." At present she is in New York, where she has gone for a week or so on a combined shopping and sight-seeing tour.

A post-war bride, she met her husband when he was stationed in Versailles. It is not far from there that the de Noailles maintain the family estate, Maintenon—which Louis XIV gave to Mme. de Maintenon.

Mrs. Macready missed out on an historic visit to America when her father, accompanying Marshal Petain, came here in 1931 for the 150th anniversary celebration of the Battle of Yorktown, in which the French forces figured so prominently.

General Macready is described as a pioneer in mechanized warfare and the designer of the Bren carrier as well as leading advocate of the famous "Waltzing Matilda" tanks. His father was the last commander in chief in Ireland, who inherited much genius for the stage from his father, William Charles Macready, most famous actor of his generation.

He Accompanied Churchill Here

To describe the general, or his wife, as well-traveled is putting it mildly. Not only does the Britisher travel, but he has been in on such spectacular trips as Winston Churchill's last visit to

Actress Yearns For Assignment Across the Seas

Hollywood has almost lost pretty starlet Janet Blair several times during her current tour through the country.

In Cleveland, after an appearance at an aircraft factory, the blond singing and dancing star of "My Sister Eileen" was so fascinated by watching the women at work that she decided to abandon her screen career and take up riveting. Her entourage saved her from this move by pointing out that a riveter would probably never have a chance to go overseas and entertain the troops and that if she was a very good girl and stuck to her camera career she might be allowed to join an overseas entertainment caravan.

Prime ambition of the youthful actress is to get an overseas assignment, but meanwhile she's devoting much of her time to entertaining the servicemen on this side of the oceans. In California, Miss Blair has run up an impressive record for Army camp appearances and on the present trip—she has been touring five weeks—entertaining servicemen has been a "must" date at every stop.

Miss Blair, who has made six pictures to her credit in the film capital, gave one soldier the time of his life when she visited Philadelphia. The Stage Door Canteen there ran a contest. The serviceman who wrote the best letter on "Why I Would Like a Date With Janet Blair" was to be her escort during her day's visit. The winner wrote pages in lyric poetry and exquisite prose on the theme—ending with, "Besides, anyone would be a fool not to want a date with her."

After a brief stay in the Capital, Miss Blair will leave this afternoon for Boston, New York and then, after a five-day visit to her home town, Altoona, Pa., she'll return to Hollywood and her next picture commitments.

Lieut. Perkins And Bride on Way South

Now on a wedding trip, Lieut. and Mrs. Frederick Wallace Perkins, Jr., will go to Tuskegee, Ala., the latter part of this week. The bridegroom is stationed there as an ordnance officer at the Army Flying School.

Mrs. Perkins is the former Miss Anna Mae Mayhall, who served for two years as secretary in the office of Senator Kilgore of West Virginia. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. Clifton Mayhall of Parkersburg.

The wedding ceremony took place on Saturday in the First Presbyterian Church in Parkersburg, W. Va. The Rev. Dr. Gill I. Wilson officiated. The bride has been making her home in Washington with her aunt, Mrs. Charles Brooks Smith. Lieutenant Perkins is a graduate of the University of Maryland.

Claussens Are Hosts at Dinner

Mr. and Mrs. Matthew B. Claussen of Wardman Park Hotel entertained at dinner there last evening in the Colonial Room before going on to the concert of the National Symphony Orchestra for the benefit of the Community War Fund.

Those who attended dinner and afterward were guests in the Claussen box at Constitution Hall were Sir Vivian Gabriel, head of the British Air Commission; Lieut. Comdr. Gordon Fisher, U. S. N., and the hosts' daughter, Miss Marion Claussen.

Helen Rasmussen Married Here

The marriage of Miss Helen E. Rasmussen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Rasmussen, and Lieut. Daryl A. Nielsen, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Nielsen of Solvang, Calif., took place Monday afternoon at 6 o'clock in the Augustana Church with the Rev. Arthur O. Hjelm officiating.

The bride was attended by Mrs. Oliver Allen as matron of honor, and Mr. Allen served as best man.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Nielsen are now residing at 8 Belvidere Road, Belle Haven, Alexandria, Va.

Frederick J. Horne—

Vice Admiral
Is Assistant
To Adm. King

This is the second in a series of stories about the men who are running the war.

By Patricia Grady

His favorite word is "frankly" and it's a good clue to his personality.

Vice Admiral Frederick Joseph Horne has one of the Navy's biggest jobs to do as Vice Chief of Naval Operations—a job he has been handling without fanfare since March of this year. It is his responsibility, as the right-hand man of Admiral Ernest J. King, to take over the administrative duties of the Navy. Everything about the Navy is in his bailiwick except the actual operations of the fleet.

You would guess the New York City birthplace of this smiling-eyed, silver-haired admiral after a telephone conversation. Self-effacing in the extreme, the admiral's self-written Who's Who item reads: "Commissioned ensign, 1901; advanced through grades to admiral."

"We're all going to have to be in this thing sooner or later," says Admiral Horne of the United States war effort. "We're going to need all the manpower we can command—including the 18-year olds. And they have proved their desire to be included in the fight, we had about 125,000 of them volunteer for naval service."

'We Are Going to Need Everyone'

And when it comes to restricting the use of women or of young servicemen to domestic duty, the admiral has little patience. "We shouldn't restrict service for anyone by legislation. That should be left to the men directing the war. And there is no reason why that should not be true of women. It's as much their country as it is a man's. We are going to need everyone. For that reason we'll probably have to lower the physical standards for active duty."

Swinging around in the chair in front of his oversize desk to face the windows looking out on a busy Constitution Avenue, Admiral Horne paid his compliments to the American people. "They are ready for anything and willing to do anything."

It used to make him mad, but he's recovered his sense of humor and now he just thinks it's funny. "These radio and press commentators who come out with brilliant plans of strategy as if they were the only ones devoting any time to thinking of strategic alternatives. And all the criticism of the press about things they know nothing about—like the antagonism between the Army and the Navy. There is the closest kind of relationship between the two forces—we know that it's one war, not separate forces fighting each other separately."

Has His Say About Complaints

"Furthermore, these complaints that the Navy releases news of sinkings so long after they occur . . . In the middle of a naval battle that may last for many weeks, commanding officers can't be thinking of how the public will react to something. They are interested in winning the battle and are using their overcrowded radio lanes to receive and transmit necessary battle information. They would rather see complaints in the newspapers than give one ounce of information to the enemy."

Does Not Favor 'Restriction by Legislation'

Even before his graduation from the Naval Academy, Admiral Horne had smelled the smoke of action in the Battle of Santiago in 1898. Following his graduation the next year he was assigned to the Asiatic Station and participated in 15 engagements in the Philippines. Then came land tours in this country and more sea service.

But it was back to Asia for this admiral, who wears an aviator's wings above his decorations, where he saw service as captain of the yard at the Olongapo Naval Station. Next came an experience that has given him particular background for the job he has to do today—he was appointed Naval Attaché of the American Embassy in Tokyo where he served for four years. For this he was given the Navy Cross, the citation reading in part . . . he had remarkable success in establishing and maintaining friendly relations with the Japanese authorities in supplying valuable information to the Office of Naval Intelligence and to the commander-in-chief of the Asiatic Fleet."

Took Over This Job in March

Admiral Horne's interest in naval aviation led him to the Naval Air Station in Pensacola, where he took instruction in aviation and qualified as a naval aviation observer in 1926. Later that year he became commander of the U. S. S. Wright, an aircraft tender, and in 1927 was transferred to the war plans division of the Office of Naval Operations here. Then in 1929 he assumed command of U. S. S. Saratoga, flagship aircraft squadrons, battle fleet, and the next year became commander of the aircraft squadrons scouting fleet.

Pearl Harbor was his headquarters when he was chief of staff of the fourteenth naval district and several years later he came to Washington as president of the naval examining board and retiring board. In 1936 he became commander of aircraft, battle force, with the rank of vice admiral, and in 1941 he was made assistant to the chief of naval operations. He took over his present job in March.

Purely Personal

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon will entertain at an informal reception Wednesday evening, November 11 following the National Symphony Orchestra Concert, asking her guests to meet Jascha Heifetz, noted violinist, who will be soloist at the concert.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Matthews Dick, who were at Newport, R. I., for the summer, are planning to spend the winter in New York and have taken an apartment at the Plaza.

The Rev. and Mrs. William Pence James have returned to their home in Riverdale Heights, Md., after a visit of three weeks in Chicago to see their son. They also visited their former home, Mason City, Iowa. Mrs. James' sisters, Mrs. W. T. Trewny and Mrs. M. E. Ward, of Peoria, Ill., joined them in Chicago.

Mrs. James M. Luke of Detroit has come to Washington to visit Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Thomas. Mrs. Luke formerly made her home here.

Mrs. William F. O'Donnell has returned to Washington from a few days stay in New York where she went to see her daughter, Miss Jeanne Marie O'Donnell, a student at Manhattanville Convent.

Simms Return From Honeymoon

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Asher Simms have returned from their wedding trip to New York and have made their home in Alexandria.

Mrs. Simms, before her marriage October 24, was Miss Elsie Louise Brown, daughter of Mrs. Joseph Sidney Brown and the late Mr. Brown of Alexandria. She was given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Harold Taylor, of Richmond, and Miss Lula Edwards of Richmond was her only attendant.

Yates-Young Troth Told

Maj. Edward Sears Yates, U. S. Marine Corps, retired, and Mrs. Yates of the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va., formerly of Washington, announced the engagement of their daughter, Virginia Elizabeth, to Coulter Dabney Young.

The prospective bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Coulter D. Young and the late Mr. Young of New Rochelle, N. Y., and Point O' Woods, Long Island. Miss Yates is the niece of the late Mark Reid Yates of Washington.

The bride was attended by Mrs. Oliver Allen as matron of honor, and Mr. Allen served as best man.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Nielsen are now residing at 8 Belvidere Road, Belle Haven, Alexandria, Va.

Two Weeks of Operetta To Break Music Drought

"Merry Widow" and Savoyards for National;
"For Me and My Gal" Revives Old-Time Tunes;
Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

NO NOVELTY in any month of the cinema's year-in-and-year-out screen parade music can hardly be said to have struck the dominant note in Washington's current season of the living theater. Something, it seems, is going to be done about that, beginning week after next.

MURIEL ANGELUS. Tom Kane, that stalwart stentor of the better things of the itinerant theater, drops by the desk with his portfolios and packing cases of art and literature, as welcome herald of the coming of "The Merry Widow" to the National Theater for the week of Monday, November 16. By an odd inversion of chronological order, Tom had been preceded by a comparative eyelash by Martha Dreihlat, another busy practitioner of the persuasive arts, as harbinger of the coming of the Boston Comic Opera Company to the same stage the following week, which would be November 23 on any calendar.

This production of Franz Lehar's immortal operetta of Paris in those gay nineties, says Mr. Kane, is not, strictly speaking, a revival. Its book and lyrics have been revised by Rowland Leigh and Randolph Carter, providing a bright new framework for the seemingly imperishable Lehar melodies. Furthermore the piece will introduce a prima donna new to the Capital in the charming person of Muriel Angelus, who will be remembered by those who saw George Abbott's production of "The Boys From Syracuse" on some distant stage, or Brian Donlevy's memorable "The Great McGinty" on the screen.

If you must know some of the others comprising the cast, they will include Edmund Dorsay, William Kent, Nina Olivette, Virginia George, Austin Fairman, Jack Stanton, Ronnie Cunningham, gifted young Washington dancer, last seen here with Ed Wynn in "Boys and Girls Together," Jules Epailly, Donald Clark, Mary Dyer and Eleanor Tenniss.

With Donald Brian and Ethel Jackson still so vividly in mind, it doesn't seem possible that the widow has been merry for a full 35 years now. But there it is in all the record books. First produced by Henry W. Savage in 1907.

It will be another delightful excursion into nostalgia, having the old girl back again.

As for the Boston Comic Opera Company, that is the presumably permanent organization that aspires to become the American counterpart of the British D'Oyly Carte Company as the perennial purveyors of the musical and lyrical charms of the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas on this side. With a few exceptions the personnel of the troupe will be as it was last season, when, shortly after Pearl Harbor, it had the temerity to open its local engagement with "The Mikado," and went on from there to a highly successful week. Bob Fittin and Florence Ames are two of the minstrels. Six of the Savoyard works will be presented here the week of the twenty-third—"Pinafore" and "Trial by Jury" on a double bill, as usual; "The Pirates of Penzance," "The Gondoliers," "The Mikado," "Iolanthe" and "Patience." If you are looking forward to the Thanksgiving Day matinee, the bill that afternoon will be "The Mikado."

But the Screen Holds Up

For the comfort of the cinemaddicts, two of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's important fall releases will be coming along to Loew's Palace Theater in the wake of "The Moon and Sixpence," opening this morning. First, "White Cargo," with Hedy Lamarr introducing the lurong—a sarong with glamour—as Tondelayo's chief article of wearing apparel, and Walter Pidgeon impersonating the principal man in her life. Next, "For Me and My Gal," in which Judy Garland, Marta Eggerth and Lucille Norman sing the favorite songs of World War I, the while George Murphy and Gene Kelly dance them. "The Major and the Minor," Paramount's comedy with Ginger Rogers and Ray Milland, is another likely feature scheduled for early F Street showing and, unless all signs and portents fall—pictures are beginning to trickle over the desk—"Black Swan," the Twentieth Century-Fox item, co-starring Tyrone Power and Maureen O'Hara in Technicolor, is still another. Not had for the horizon-peekers-over.

If "The Merry Widow" goes too far back to stir sleeping memories in any but those of us tottering about in the last stages of senility, "For Me and My Gal" may do better for a slightly younger generation, by exhuming a mess of songs that only date back a quarter of a century or so. You'll be hearing "Ballin' the Jack," "Tell Me," "By the Beautiful Sea," "After You've Gone," "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," "Oh, Johnny," "How Ya Gonna Keep 'em Down on the Farm?" "For Me and My Gal" and right out of the trenches, "Till We Meet Again," "Tipperary" and "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag and Smile, Smile, Smile." Seems like yesterday!

Dots and Dashes

This will be a busy day at RKO-Keith's . . . After breakfasting with the press at 10, Jane Wyatt, only feminine player in the picture, will make three personal appearances in conjunction with the Washington premiere of "Here Comes the Navy" . . . Walter Compton, of the Mutual network, will be m. c. . . High-ranking officers of the Navy and officials of the Maritime Commission will be guests of the management at the 8 p. m. performance . . . And tomorrow night, between 11 and 11:30 by the clock, Smiley Burnette, touring the Sidney Lust theaters, will make a personal appearance at the dance being given by the Women's Battalion at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing . . . Two of the stars of his Western Revue will be with him . . . All for the entertainment of the uniformed forces—about 1200 of them—under the auspices of the D. C. Recreation Department . . . Sammy Kaye and His Orchestra, who supply the melodies for Sonja Henie's "Ice Land"—just off the screen at the Palace—will be the major stage attraction at the Capitol the week of Thursday, November 12 . . . Picture will be "Girl Trouble," starring Don Ameche, Joan Bennett and Frank Craven . . . Goodby call from Leon Askin, who won't be directing any more plays locally for the duration . . . Joins the Army today . . . They'll probably all be doing it, but the first of the neighborhood picture houses to announce special Armistice Day matinees, for November 11, are the Apex, Atlas, Senator and Princess of the Kodog-Burka chain . . . That would be next Wednesday.

Or-Don't-You-Read-the-Headlines Note

Was there ever an Armistice Day?

Pix

A Gallic picturization of young love, which finds its prototype in the American adolescent, provides the theme of "Claudine," latest addition to the Pix Theater's string of French films. Outside of some picturesque outdoor photography of rural France and some good characterizations by some of the minor players, the picture is inclined to be both awkward and slow-moving.

Blanchette Brunoy portrays the precocious 16-year-old, who knows all about love and life and introduces the forbidden writings of Casanova and Balzac to her schoolmates. A reversal of "Maedchen in Uniform" enters the film when Claudine becomes the object of an unnatural passion from the school's headmistress. The arrival of another woman teacher further complicates the situation. Claudine is released from the influence of the teachers when a new doctor puts in an appearance and absorbs the attention of the ladies.

The supporting cast includes Max Dearly, Margo Lion, Suzet Mais and Pierre Brasseur. On view since last Saturday, "Little Tokyo, U. S. A." which is co-feature to "Claudine," credits Preston Foster with being responsible for the evacuation of the Japanese on the West Coast. The subject proves interesting and more than once the picture gives indication of some exciting moments which, somehow, never materialize.

As Michael Steele, hard-boiled detective whose beat is Los Angeles' Little Tokyo, Foster is too much hampered by the material ever really to get started, but he does manage to have his moments.

That Title Again!

LESLIE BROOKS, titian-haired and blue-eyed, demonstrates how one might hope she will look in Columbia's "You Were Never Lovelier," starring Fred Astaire and Rita Hayworth. She made her screen debut as one of the "Navy Blues Sextet."

A Doll Role For Frank Morgan

Frank Morgan will portray one of his outstanding screen characterizations as the Supreme Court justice who takes a "busman's holiday" in "Mr. Justice Goes Hunting." Richard Carlson, as a small town lawyer, and Ruth Hussey, as Morgan's pretty secretary, play the romantic leads.

Story revolves around the lovable Associate Justice. On a hunting trip, he is arrested for not having the proper license, and stumbles on a backwoods community political machine. After breaking the machine and promoting the romance of Carlson and Miss Hussey, he returns to the Capital without having fired a gun. But he tells his fellow justices that hunting was "The best I ever had!"

LEONARD LYONS

Words to the Wise

New York, Nov. 4. PEARL BUCK: Admiral Yarnell, who knows the Orient and who is so popular at Chungking, is a favorite for the post of American Ambassador to China. . . REPRESENTATIVE HAMILTON FISH: George Hill, your convicted secretary, has been moved back to Washington, D. C., cell—where he's talking his head off.

MARY HOWARD

JESSE JONES: Henry J. Kaiser is working on a project to raise his own synthetic rubber, for the ships and planes he's building. He'll use the California wine-stills built by the Government after repeal. These stills are used only three months a year. Kaiser expects to obtain full capacity there—75 million gallons of alcohol a year. . . JIM FARLEY: The first runs will be fired later this week, demanding a reorganization of the Democratic State Committee, to unite the warring factions. . . U. S. ATTORNEY CORREA: A lady now being detained on Ellis Island will be indicted next week by the Washington Grand Jury which will add her to the 28 already indicted.

MAXWELL ANDERSON: Your protégé, Marion Hargrove—author of that excellent best-seller, "See Here, Private Hargrove"—is the subject of an article in Collier's. Lloyd Shearer of "Yank" wrote the article. . . EMILY POST: General Chu of the Chinese military mission was in El Morocco, where he submitted to a palm-reading. "Did she tell you the truth?" the general was asked. "Well, yes," the gracious general confessed, "but I lied a little, to make her feel good." . . RAYMOND MASSEY: Mary Howard, the screen actress who appeared with you in "Abe Lincoln," is in New York now, preparing to return to the stage.

SECRETARY KNOX: Senator McNary will be asked to head a group of Democratic and Republican Senators, who were non-isolationist before December 7, in a coalition petition requesting the President to make two War-Cabinet changes. . . MILO PERKINS: Is it true that you're declining the job of Federal Food Administrator? . . . BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB: The slowest job of autobiographic writing is being recorded by busy Bernard Baruch. Years ago, Baruch contracted to write his autobiography for Simon & Schuster—but he's been delivering one page and a half each year.

KATHARINE CORNELL: Jean Amund, who was your leading man in the Henri Bernstein play, is going to Montreal to appear in a series of French plays. His leading lady will be Germaine Assaye, wife of John Ringling North. . . HENRY WALLACE: The editors of Fortune are writing a book describing the postwar world. It will be called "Fruits of Victory." . . EQUITY: Lew Parker headlined the first unit which toured the Army camps. He did that for two years, then three, and jumped at the chance to tour with "Helldogs." Last week he was notified that starting November 23, "Helldogs" will become a USO unit playing camp shows.

Veronica Lake Shuns Haircut

To cut or not to cut—that is the question.

The Hard of Avon never heard of Veronica Lake, but his immortal lines for Hamlet can be paraphrased to fit a situation in which Veronica finds herself in the midst of her spectacular screen career.

The famous Lake bob is getting quite long now, having grown 6 inches in the past year and a half, and Miss Lake is becoming fonder each day of the luxuriant tresses, now 22 inches long and cloaking her shoulders.

And the studio wants to cut that famous bob, with its familiar curl over her right eye, so that it will not lose its general appearance, the appearance with which everyone associated Veronica Lake.

But Veronica, stroking the golden tresses their full length as she goes through her scenes in "The Glass Key" with Brian Donlevy and Alan Ladd, says, in effect, "Never! No one is going to cut my hair—let the public get used to it as it grows!"

Little

Gary Cooper's fine performance as the American adventurer, who has thrown in his lot with China's oppressed millions, is but one of the reasons why "The General Died at Dawn" is being held over for a third week in its present revival engagement at the Little Theater. The other superlative elements include Lewis Milestone's direction, which creates an atmosphere of suspense and excitement throughout, and Clifford Odets's excellent script that is crammed full of racy, realistic dialogue.

The story deals with the China of 1936, when Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek was struggling to organize his country within, as well as to do battle with the enemies without. In addition to Cooper, the cast includes Madeleine Carroll, Akim Tamiroff, Dudley Digges, Porter Hall and Leonard Kinsky.

Costar Again

After seeing their work in Paramount's "Wrecking Crew," Richard Arlen and Chester Morris have been signed again to costar, this time in "Aerial Gunner" for Producers Pine and Thomas.

Letters for Official

Vice President Henry A. Wallace is beginning to get fan mail in Hollywood since his appearance in the Paramount Victory short, "Price of Victory."

A Bit of the Orient in Hollywood

who lends an exotic, atmospheric touch to certain of the scenes in the Warner Brothers picturization of "The Desert Song," not yet quite ready for release. Dennis Morgan and Irene Manning are cast in the principal roles in this colorful opus—and we mean colorful. It is executed in Technicolor, which should not prove a deterrent to Miss Opert's appeal.

Pillow Does It

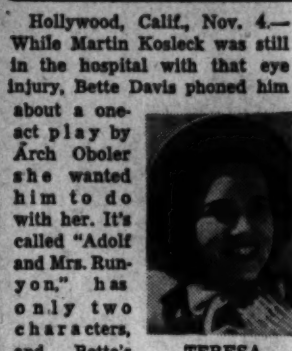

Dona Drake, featured in "Road to Morocco," recently moved from a furnished to an unfurnished home and decorated her entire new house around a davenport pillow she liked.

Brings Own Lunch

Every day while starring with Ray Milland in "The Major and the Minor," Ginger Rogers brought her lunch, ate in her dressing room, then took a nap until the lunch hour ended.

HEDDA HOPPER

Bette Finds One to Her Liking

TERESA WRIGHT

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 4.—While Martin Kosleck was still in the hospital with that eye injury, Bette Davis phoned him about a one-act play by Arch Oboler she wanted him to do with her. It's called "Adolf and Mrs. Runyon," has only two characters, and Bette's idea was to WRIGHT. do a bond-selling tour and entertain Army camps with it. But Warner's can't spare her from the studio that long, so Betty and Martin may make it as a patriotic short.

Jennifer Jones, who was announced elsewhere as selected to play the virgin in "The Song of Bernadette," arrives today to be tested for the part, along with 39 others. There's a little girl named Beatrice Pearson (she was "Claudia" understudy on the stage) who's made a mighty fine test.

But when they've counted all the noses, it's my hunch that the one who'll be starred in it will be none other than Teresa Wright, who was born for the part.

It's seldom you hire a technical adviser to see that the background of a picture is wrong instead of right, but that's just what Director George Stevens did when he got Newspaperman Cliff Potter for "Merry-Go-Round" to see that the characters don't resemble any living person in Washington today.

While Dick Thorpe is around Ventura looking for locations, Joan Crawford and Fred MacMurray are talking about their coming movie, "Above Suspicion." No, Joan's husband won't be in it, but he did take a test the other day at Metro, in which they "co-starred."

Hear Thomas Mitchell now has the inside track for the life of Winston Churchill, which Warners will do.

Lee Tracy leaves Hollywood November 7 for Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., to report as a first lieutenant in the military police. He's stopping off at Chattanooga to make plans for a personal appearance at the premiere of his last picture, "The Pay-Off."

Fate plays funny tricks on you. Doris Dudley, Bide's daughter, has made three attempts to make a big name for herself in the movies. But the one who's making the hit is her son, who's Mickey Rooney's pal in "The Human Comedy."

Wait till you see Little Margaret O'Brien in "Journey for Margaret." She's a knockout. Her mother has quite a story, too. She wanted to have a career. In fact, at one time, she was a dancer. She still wears the shortest skirts on the Metro lot, but it's her daughter, Margaret, who's made the success.

Nine-year-old John Donat, Robert's son, just started his first picture job in "This Land Is Mine," and got the let-down of his life when he found out he had to keep on going to school, too. But he took it like a man, and said, "well, I guess I can handle both jobs!"

With the shortage of type-writers in our studios, Virginia Van Upp says she's been sharing hers with two other writers. And you can imagine the laugh that went up in the writers' building the other day when she opened her door and screamed down to the end of the line, "Hey, Joel! Hurry up with my typewriter! I'm in a frenzy of fecundity—you know, like water over Niagara—my villain is choking the heroine to death, and if I don't get the hero in there quickly, they'll have no movie! So bring in my typewriter!"

OPA Expected to Appeal PUC Approval of Gas Rate Rise

notice and right of intervention in any general rate increase in common carriers or utilities.

Although the case was reopened at the request of the OPA, the PCU limited its intervention to testimony on the inflationary effect of the rate increase, and refused Henderson's request that the increase order be rescinded. As late as Tuesday night, Hen-

Booth publicly repeated these requests, which were still not granted.

Tax Accruals

Booth tried to interrogate both company and PUC accountants to explain tax accruals for the first year on which the rate base was calculated, but Corporation Counsel Richmond Keech challenged these inquiries as being irrelevant.

At this point Booth read a prepared statement which said, in part: "This office is still very anxious to aid the commission in arriving at a proper decision in this case. If the commission desires our further assistance, it can only be given under the conditions laid down by Congress. After all, Congress and not this commission, its counsel or the company prescribe our obligation and course of action we think we must follow in this case.

"Until the commission conforms to the spirit and letter of the act

let's be practical this Christmas

Let's say it and mean it: Let's be practical this Christmas. Remember Jane is furnishing her new apartment and needs just a pair of lamps to complete her living room . . . that Dorothy has been yearning for years for a mirror to put above her fireplace . . . that Mary would be as pleased as a child with a toy with an electric mixer. They're practical gifts . . . with all the romance of the world attached because they'll make some home prettier . . . a little more comfortable. But let's remember first . . . that the finest gifts of all are War Bonds and Stamps.

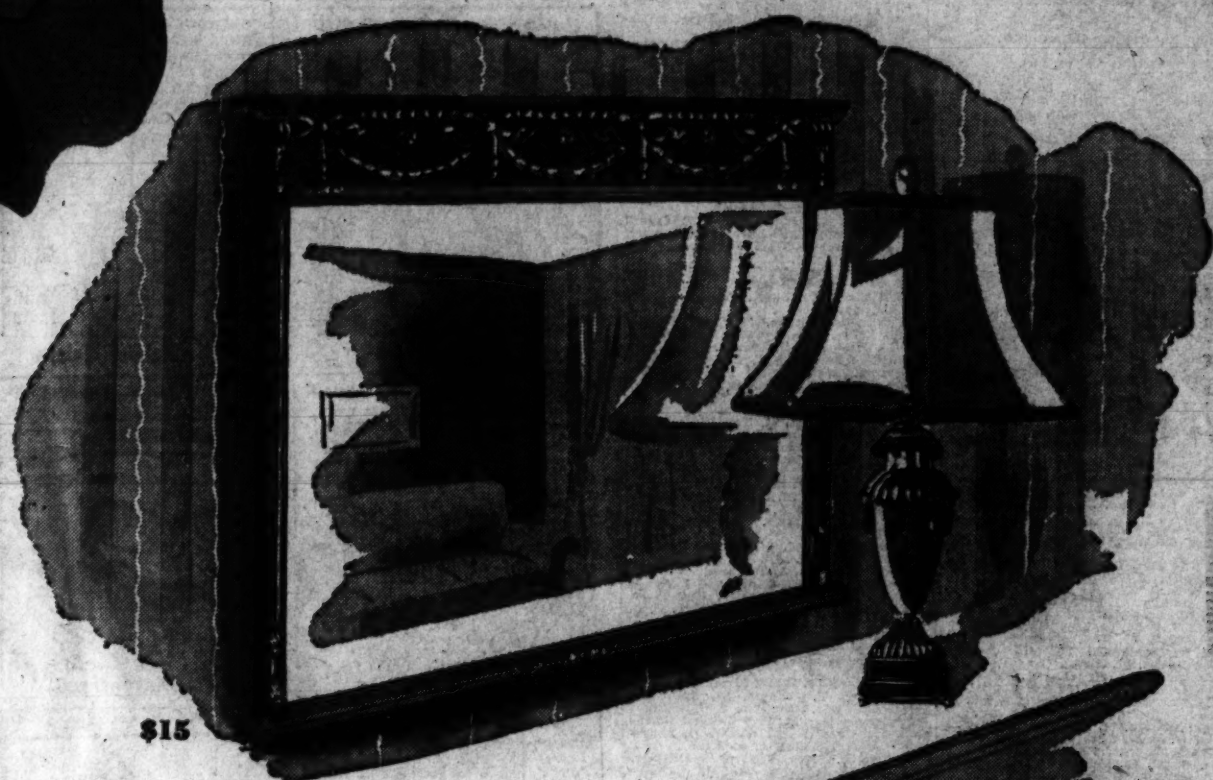

GILBERT ELECTRIC MIXER AND JUICER

Perfect gift for the Bride struggling with the ABC's of cooking! Famous Gilbert Mixer with powerful three-speed horizontal motor that can whip up the heaviest of batters . . . that doesn't need to be inverted when you attach the juicer. Comes complete with one large and one small mixing bowl and the juicer.
